PREFACE, by the Hon. JOHN HITZ 1–2

INTRODUCTION.

Aim of the present Inquiry 3
Diverse and contradictory conclusions of previous writers 3–4
These diversities and contradictions due to insufficient data 4
Method of the present Inquiry 5
America the best field for investigation of the subject 5–7
The term "deaf" as used in this monograph 7
Origin of the present Inquiry 7–8
Blank marriage record used for collecting data 8–9
Sources of information 9–10
Extent and value of statistics collected 10
Acknowledgment of assistance received 10–11
Practical value of the Inquiry 11–12

CHAPTER I.

MARRIAGES OF THE DEAF, ONE OR BOTH OF THE PARTNERS BEING DEAF.

Total number of marriages recorded 13
Number of marriages in each decade of the nineteenth century 13–15
Number of partners in marriage 15
Marriages excluded from tabulation because of lack of information concerning results 15–16
Marriages excluded because too recent to have produced offspring. 16
Number of marriages included in tabulation and number of children reported as born therefrom 16
Marriages of the deaf probably slightly less productive of offspring than ordinary marriages 16–18
Far more liable to result in deaf offspring than ordinary marriages 18–21
Far more likely to result in hearing offspring than in deaf offspring 21
These conclusions in accordance with the generally accepted laws of heredity 21–22

CHAPTER II.

MARRIAGES IN WHICH BOTH OF THE PARTNERS ARE DEAF, AND MARRIAGES IN WHICH ONE OF THE PARTNERS IS A HEARING PERSON.

PAGE.

The tendency of deaf people to marry one another 23–24
Reasons that have been assigned for this tendency 24–27
These reasons inadequate to explain it 27–28
The true explanation to be found in the mutual sympathy arising from similarity of condition 28–29
Marriages in which both partners are deaf somewhat less productive of offspring than those in which one partner is a hearing person . 29–30
Not more liable to result in deaf offspring 31–32
Proportion of deaf children born to number of deaf persons married less where both partners were deaf than where one partner was a hearing person 32–34
Explanations that have been proposed for this phenomenon 34–35

CHAPTER III.

MARRIAGES OF THE CONGENITALLY DEAF AND OF THE ADVENTITIOUSLY DEAF.

Difficulty of determining with certainty whether the deafness is congenital or adventitious 36–37
Proportion of the adventitiously deaf married larger than that of the congenitally deaf 37–39
Marriages of the congenitally deaf 39 of the adventitiously deaf 39–40
of the congenitally and adventitiously deaf to partners congenitally and adventitiously deaf 41
The proportions of such marriages compared with conclusions derived from "the theory of probabilities" 41–42
Marriages of the congenitally deaf probably slightly less productive of offspring than those of the adventitiously deaf 42–47
Far more liable to result in deaf offspring 47–54
This conclusion in accordance with the generally accepted law of heredity 54–55
The liability to deaf offspring even where both parents are congenitally deaf not due to the union of "like with like" 55–59
Explanations that have been proposed for this supposed exception to the law of heredity 59–60
Reason why the law is not applicable to marriages of the deaf 60–61

PAGE.

The results of marriages in which both parents were adventitiously deaf compared with those in which one parent was a hearing person 61-62

The smaller proportion of deaf offspring where both partners were deaf still unexplained 62-63

CHAPTER IV.

MARRIAGES OF THE DEAF, ONE OR BOTH OF THE PARTNERS HAVING DEAF RELATIVES.

The frequent occurrence of deafness in families 64

Conclusions that have been drawn from this circumstance 64 65

The possession of deaf brothers and sisters probably not a more important indication of liability to deaf offspring than the possession of other deaf relatives 65 66

The proportion of deaf married persons having deaf relatives probably far larger than that of married people in general 66-67

Far larger among the congenitally deaf than among the adventitiously deaf 68

The proportion of hearing persons having deaf relatives probably far larger among those married to deaf partners than among hearing persons in general 69-70

Reasons why hearing persons having deaf relatives marry deaf partners 70

Marriages of the congenitally deaf, considered with respect to the possession of deaf relatives 71 78

of the adventitiously deaf 78-83

of the deaf, whether congenitally or adventitiously unreported 84-87

The liability to deaf offspring greatest where partners have deaf relatives, however they are classified with respect to congenital or adventitious deafness 88

Marriages in which both partners were deaf and those in which one partner was hearing, considered with respect to the possession of deaf relatives 88-92

The liability to deaf offspring greatest where partners have deaf relatives, however they are classified with respect to the deafness of one or both partners 92

All marriages of the deaf considered with respect to the possession of deaf relatives 92-94

The possession of deaf relatives a more important indication of liability to deaf offspring than congenital deafness 94-95

Marriages in which one partner was a hearing person considered with respect to the possession of deaf relatives 95-97

PAGE.

Hearing partners having deaf relatives as liable to deaf offspring as deaf partners 97–99
The larger proportion of deaf offspring where one partner was a hearing person still unexplained 99–100
The possession of deaf relatives affords the key to the solution of the question of the liability of marriages of the deaf to result in deaf offspring 100–101
The advice to be given the deaf on the subject of marriage 101–104

CHAPTER V.

CONSANGUINEOUS MARRIAGES OF THE DEAF.

The results of consanguineous marriages in general 105
The probable results of consanguineous marriages of the deaf 105–106
Number of consanguineous marriages reported 106
Various relationships between partners in marriage 106–107
Consanguineous marriages of the deaf very liable to result in deaf offspring 107–109
Dangerous, no matter what the character of the relationship, 109–110
Nor whether one or both partners are deaf 110–111
Nor whether the deafness of one or both or neither is congenital 111–112
Nor whether either or both or neither have other deaf relatives 112–114
The larger proportion of deaf offspring where one partner was a hearing person probably due to the larger proportion of consanguineous marriages in which one partner was a hearing person, 114–116
Further advice to be given the deaf on the subject of marriage 116

CHAPTER VI.

HAPPINESS.

The general opinion that marriages in which both partners are deaf are more likely to result happily than those in which one partner is a hearing person 117
Dissent from this opinion 118
The question cannot be settled by individual testimony and opinion 118–119
Divorces and separations as an indication of the extent of marital infelicity 119
The proportion of divorces and separations far less where both partners were deaf 120–121
Reasons why such marriages are more likely to result happily 121

CHAPTER VII.

PREFACE.

Among the charges which Dr. A. Graham Bell committed to the Volta Bureau, upon liberally endowing that institution, was that of promoting researches in regard to Marriages of the Deaf in America. This work had been systematically entered upon by Dr. E. A. Fay, Editor of the American Annals of the Deaf, who was peculiarly fitted for a task of such importance and magnitude.

Dr. Fay's undertaking this work as a labor of love was sufficient assurance that it would be conscientiously prosecuted, and rendered of unquestionable value as a basis for scientific deductions. To this end the resources of the Volta Bureau fund were placed at Dr. Fay's disposal, in order that the labor of presenting these statistical data might cover the greatest possible scope and leave nothing wanting that could be deemed essential.

The work of taking the Eleventh Census of the United States occurring during this period, and the Federal Government having appointed Dr. Fay its special agent for the collection of statistics relating to the deaf of the United States, it was thought desirable officially to supplement the census returns by details not provided for in the Government appropriations, as the additional data would prove of importance in the marriage researches then being made. To accomplish this, it was requisite to make liberal use of the Volta fund, although, in addition, much labor was generously given by numerous public-spirited deaf persons, and also by teachers, principals, and superintendents of schools for the deaf.

The result is that this Bureau can now congratulate itself, and all those interested in the cause of the deaf, in having secured through Dr. Fay's untiring care material of inestimable value to the deaf, to science, and to humanity at large.

JOHN HITZ,
Superintendent of the Volta Bureau.

INTRODUCTION.

THE chief aim of this Inquiry concerning the Results of Marriages of the Deaf in America is to find true answers to the following questions, which are of great interest and importance to the deaf as a class and as individuals, and also to society:

1. Are marriages of deaf persons more liable to result in deaf offspring than ordinary marriages?

2. Are marriages in which both of the partners are deaf more liable to result in deaf offspring than marriages in which one of the partners is deaf and the other is a hearing person?

3. Are certain classes of the deaf, however they may marry, more liable than others to have deaf children? If so, how are these classes respectively composed, and what are the conditions that increase or diminish this liability?

4. Aside from the question of the liability of the offspring to deafness, are marriages in which both of the partners are deaf more likely to result happily than marriages in which one of the partners is deaf and the other is a hearing person?

Some other points, of minor interest and importance, will also be considered.

The questions above stated, especially the first and second, have been much discussed in Europe and America, as may be seen by referring to the extensive bibliography given at the end of this monograph. The conclusions reached differ widely. Some writers maintain that marriages of the deaf are far more liable to result in deaf offspring than ordinary marriages, and that this liability is greatly increased when both of the partners in marriage are deaf; others maintain that such marriages are but little more liable to result in deaf offspring than ordinary marriages, and others that they are not at all more liable. As examples of the two extremes may be cited, on the one hand, the conclusion of Dr. Alexander Graham Bell, who declares that "the evidence shows a tendency to the formation of a deaf variety of the human race in America;"* and, on the other hand, the conclusion of the commissioners of the Irish census of 1881, who say that "it appears evident that the question of deafness and dumbness in the parents has no influence in propagating the defect."†

The conclusions of Dr. Bell and of the commissioners of the Irish census are drawn from the statistics of different countries, but we cannot believe that the laws of heredity that hold in America do not also hold in Ireland; in fact, similarly opposite conclusions might be cited from numerous writers residing in the same countries, but dealing with different data. The cause of all these diversities and contradictions is that, on one side or the other, or on both, either the statistics upon which the conclusions are based do not include a sufficiently large number of cases, or they are not sufficiently full and accurate. The number of marriages collected by each investigator is comparatively small, and the details given are so meagre that even by grouping together all the statistics that have been published no conclusive results can be obtained. Dr. Holder Mygind, of Copenhagen, writing on this subject since the present Inquiry was begun, says: "It is impossible to make use of the numerous reports of single cases in which

Dr. Bell's conclusion is based chiefly upon the results of the marriages of former pupils of the Hartford and Illinois schools for the deaf, and upon the returns of the United States census of 1880.

† "Census of Ireland, 1881, Part II, General Report, Dublin, 1882," p. 44. The conclusion of the commissioners is based upon the returns of the censuses of 1851, 1861, and 1871.

deaf and dumb children have been born in marriages contracted by deaf-mutes, to prove the frequency with which such marriages produce deaf-mute offspring. It is only by collecting all the marriages contracted by deaf-mutes in a certain country or province into a group, and by investigating the number of these marriages which have produced deaf-mute children, and the number of the latter, that it is possible to arrive at reliable conclusions."* This is the method adopted in the present Inquiry, and it is hoped and believed that the statistics collected include a sufficiently large number of cases, and are sufficiently full and accurate, to render the conclusions trustworthy.

In Europe as well as America, since the education of the deaf has become general, marriage has ceased to be rare among them; but in America, partly in consequence of the freedom from certain restrictions that hamper marriage more or less in most European countries, and partly on account of the more prosperous circumstances, and consequent greater ability to support a family, of the deaf of this country, the proportion of those who marry is larger than in Europe. In Denmark, in 1880, according to the census of that year, 23.7 of the adult deaf residing in the rural districts and provincial towns were married.† In other countries of Europe the percentage of the deaf who marry, as indicated by the meagre statistics that have been published, is considerably lower than in Denmark. In Magdeburg, in 1871, the percentage of the adult deaf who were married was 12 per cent.;* in Cologne, in 1870, it was 10 per cent.;† in Prussia, in 1880, 7½ per cent.;‡ in Bavaria, in 1871, 7 per cent.§ In the United States, 27,924 pupils had attended schools for the deaf up to the year 1890,‖ and the present collection of marriage records shows that 6,460, or 23.1 per cent., of these have been married. Inasmuch as (1) many of the pupils included in the former statement are still in school, (2) some who have left school have not yet arrived at a marriageable age, and (3) probably not all who have been married are recorded, the true percentage of those who marry is much higher. Dr. Bell, inquiring into the number of former pupils of the American and Illinois schools born before 1840, found the proportion of those who had been married up to 1882 to be 45.4 per cent.,¶ and this rate is probably an approximation to the true percentage of the married deaf in the United States. This country, public care of deaf-mutes is especially highly developed, what must it be in other countries, where matters concerning deaf-mutes are less advanced? * * * The reason why comparatively so few deaf-mutes contract marriages must, in my opinion, be chiefly sought in this circumstance, that the men comparatively rarely attain an independent position to make a good livelihood."—Ibid., pp. 404, 405, 407.

therefore, offers the most abundant materials for the investigation of the results of marriages of the deaf.

The term "deaf," in its widest application, includes all degrees of imperfection of hearing. "Von Tröltsch declares (and he has never been contradicted) that every third person between twenty and fifty years of age is more or less deaf, at least in one ear."* There is reason to believe that slight imperfection of hearing is of scarcely less importance in connection with the question of heredity than total deafness, but, in order to bring the present Inquiry within reasonable limits and to render the calculation of percentages feasible, it was necessary to draw a line of demarcation somewhere. The term "deaf," as used in this monograph, invariably refers to the class of persons for whose benefit our "schools for the deaf" are intended —persons so deaf from birth, childhood or youth that they cannot be educated in common schools, persons who are more frequently but less accurately classed as "the deaf and dumb" or "deaf-mutes."† It includes all persons who are recorded in school reports, census reports, marriage records, etc., as "deaf and dumb," "deaf-mutes," "totally deaf," "very deaf," "deaf," or "very hard of hearing," and all who have attended schools for the deaf. Persons recorded as "slightly deaf," "partially deaf," "deaf in one ear," "deaf in adult life," "hard of hearing," etc., are not included, unless they have attended schools for the deaf.

The present Inquiry was begun in the year 1889, and the work has continued uninterruptedly since that time. In October of the previous year the Hon. Frederick Howard Wines, then Secretary of the Illinois State Board of Charities, had addressed a circular letter to the heads of American schools for the deaf, asking their co-operation in an effort to establish a record of future marriages of the deaf in the United States, which he proposed to publish in the International Record of Charities and Correction, a periodical of which he was the editor. He prepared a form of record which was to show whether either of the partners in marriage was a hearing and speaking person, and, if not, whether he or she was congenitally or adventitiously deaf. As some of the replies received by Mr. Wines suggested that the American Annals of the Deaf would be a more suitable medium for the proposed publication, he offered to transfer the whole scheme to the editor of the Annals. The offer was accepted. On further consideration it was decided to modify the plan considerably, extending it so as to comprise past as well as future marriages, to include in the Inquiry many important details not provided for in the original scheme, and to defer publication until a large body of statistics should have been collected and collated. The following blank marriage record was prepared and copies were widely distributed among heads of schools for the deaf, the deaf themselves, and their relatives and friends:

[Please answer the questions as fully as possible, and return the record to E. A. Fay, Kendall Green, Washington, D. C.]

Marriage record of —— —— (husband) and —— —— (name of wife before marriage.)

I. *Details Relating to Marriage.

1. Date of marriage? Place of marriage? Were the parties related before marriage? If so, what relationship? Give any other details known relating to marriage.

2. Offspring. Total number of children born of this marriage? How many deaf? How many hearing? How many died in infancy? Give any other details known relating to offspring; for example—names, dates of birth or death, causes of death, ages at death, etc., where possible. If any are or were deaf, write the word deaf after their names.

* In the original of the blank marriage record ample spaces are left for answers to all the questions.

II. Questions to be Answered by Husband.

1. Parentage. Name of your father? Name of your mother before marriage? Were your parents related before marriage? If so, what relationship? Give any other details known relating to parents; for example—causes of death, dates of death, ages at death, etc., where possible.

2. Brothers and Sisters. Give your full name and date of birth, and the names of all your brothers and sisters, with dates of birth, if possible. Where dates are not given, state whether names are in the order of birth or not. How many of these (yourself included) are or were deaf? How many hearing? How many died young (under two years)? Give any other details known; for example—causes of death, ages at death, etc. Write the word deaf after the names of all who are or were deaf.

3. Other Relatives. Have you any deaf relatives other than brothers and sisters or children? If so, give relationship and names, if possible.

4. Note. Are you deaf or hearing? If deaf: Age when deafness occurred? Cause of deafness? Attended what school or institution? Residence when admitted? Year when admitted? Age when admitted? Years under instruction? Present residence? Occupation?

III. Questions to be Answered by Wife.

1. Parentage. Name of your father? Name of your mother before marriage? Were your parents related before marriage? If so, what relationship? Give any other details known relating to parents; for example—causes of death, dates of death, ages at death, etc., where possible.

2. Brothers and Sisters. Give your full name and date of birth, and the names of all your brothers and sisters, with dates of birth, if possible. Where dates are not given, state whether names are in order of birth or not. How many of these (yourself included) are or were deaf? How many hearing? How many died young (under two years)? Give any other details known; for example—causes of death, ages at death, etc. Write the word deaf after the names of all who are or were deaf.

3. Other Relatives. Have you any deaf relatives other than brothers and sisters or children? If so, give relationship and names, if possible.

4. Note. Are you deaf or hearing? If deaf: Age when deafness occurred? Cause of deafness? Attended what school or institution? Residence when admitted? Year when admitted? Age when admitted? Years under instruction? Present residence? Occupation?

IV. Remarks.

Date of information.

(Signed) ——— ———.

The replies received to the inquiries contained in the above blank marriage record have been far more numerous and more complete than was anticipated. Several thousand records have been returned with the questions more or less fully answered. Many of these have been duplicates, and in some cases five or six returns have been made by different persons concerning the same marriage. As details omitted by one correspondent have often been furnished by another, all have been welcome. In cases of doubtful, uncertain, or contradictory returns, verification has been sought by further correspondence. Much additional information has been obtained from the early volumes of the American Annals of the Deaf, the numerous periodicals published for the benefit of the deaf, the annual and biennial reports of schools and institutions, and the returns of the United States census enumerators. The result of the whole effort is a collection of records of marriages of the deaf far larger than all previous collections put together; records, moreover, which, notwithstanding many defects, are believed to be trustworthy in their essential features, and which contain an immense quantity of valuable statistical information concerning the partners in marriage, their children, parents, brothers and sisters, and other relatives.

Without the assistance which has been rendered by many persons, the work could not have been accomplished. Acknowledgments are due to nearly all the heads of American schools for the deaf, who have supplied such statistics concerning their former pupils as were given in their school records, and have obtained others by correspondence and personal inquiry; to several teachers in schools for the deaf, who have devoted much time to the copying and comparison of records, and the collection of further data; to many of the deaf themselves, who have not only cheerfully given all desired information concerning their own marriages, but have been of great service in gathering statistics concerning the marriages of others; and to several students of Gallaudet College, who have rendered important help in copying records and collating results, above all Miss May Martin, who has been my faithful and efficient assistant for the past three years. Special acknowledgment is due to Dr. Alexander Graham Bell, who, as soon as he learned of the work in which I was engaged, committed to my hands all the material relating to the marriages of the deaf which he himself had collected, and placed at my disposal the resources of the "Volta Fund," a sum which he had set apart a short time before for the increase and diffusion of knowledge relating to the deaf. The Volta Bureau, afterwards established for the administration of this fund, has continued to furnish the necessary means for the prosecution of the inquiry. To prevent all possible misunderstanding, I may be permitted to add that, while I have drawn freely upon the Volta Fund to compensate my numerous helpers, my own share in the work, which has occupied the greater part of my leisure hours for the past six years, has been purely a labor of love.

The work was undertaken, and has been carried on, in the hope that it might be of service to the deaf and to society by settling definitely the question whether or not the deaf are more liable than hearing persons to have deaf children; and, if it should appear that, notwithstanding the numerous instances to the contrary, they are more liable to this result, by ascertaining whether or not the liability is increased by the marriage of the deaf with one another; also whether certain classes of the deaf, however married, are more liable than others to have deaf children; and, if this should prove to be the case, by determining how these classes are respectively composed, so that, as the result of the conclusions reached, in many instances deaf persons might be advised to follow the choice of their own hearts in marriage, with no restrictions whatever except such as should influence all right-minded persons in this important matter; while, in cases where the deafness of the parent was unquestionably more liable than in others to reappear in the offspring, the persons interested might be effectively warned in time of the danger incurred. If such results shall follow this work, I shall feel amply repaid for all the time and labor it has cost.

AN INQUIRY CONCERNING THE RESULTS OF MARRIAGES OF THE DEAF IN AMERICA.

CHAPTER I.

MARRIAGES OF THE DEAF, ONE OR BOTH OF THE PARTNERS BEING DEAF.

THE total number of marriages of the deaf in the United States and Canada, one or both of the partners being deaf, concerning which trustworthy returns, more or less complete, have been received, is 4,471. Active efforts to obtain reports of recent marriages ceased after June, 1894, but 33 records of marriages occurring since that date have been received and are included in the tabulation. It is not supposed that all the marriages of the deaf that have taken place in the United States and Canada up to the end of June, 1894, are included in this collection, but it is believed that a majority of them are included.

The following table shows the number of marriages recorded as having taken place in each decade of the nineteenth century down to the present, the number in the first 3½ years of the present decade, the number occurring since June, 1894, that are included in the tabulation, and the number of which the dates are unreported, together with the percentage of the number of marriages of each period to the whole number of marriages:

TABLE I.

Marriages of the deaf.	Number.	Percenta
In first decade, 1801–1810*	1	.0
In second decade, 1811–1820†	1	.0
In third decade, 1821–1830	8	.1
In fourth decade, 1831–1840	37	.8
In fifth decade, 1841–1850	84	1.8
In sixth decade, 1851–1860	198	4.4
In seventh decade, 1861–1870	369	8.2
In eighth decade, 1871–1880	532	11.8
In ninth decade, 1881–1890	1,017	22.7
In 3½ years of tenth decade, 1891–June 30, 1894.	534	11.9
Since June 30, 1894	33	.7
Dates not reported	1,657	37.0
Total	4,471	100.0

Probably the actual rate of progression in the num of marriages from decade to decade is not precisely as dicated by the above table, since (1) the marriages of earlier decades are probably less fully recorded than later ones, and (2) a considerable number of the marria

* The first marriage of which the date is recorded took place in 1 The husband was an uneducated deaf-mute, the wife a hea woman. After the first American school for the deaf was opened Hartford, fourteen years later, the husband sought admission as a pu but was thrice refused on account of his age. He was finally admit at the age of fifty, on condition that he himself would pay the tuition f He remained a year, making excellent progress.

† In the second marriage recorded (1819) both partners were d Thirty-nine years later, in an address delivered before the instructors pupils of the Hartford School, the husband said that, when he marr "the marriage of deaf-mutes with each other was objected to by m friends, and even by Dr. Thomas Hopkins Gallaudet, then principal of Hartford School. It was feared they would suffer too many inconv iences; also that the number of deaf-mutes would thereby be multipli He related how the first thing he did, on the birth of his first child, to satisfy himself, by experiment, that the child could hear, and pleased he was to find that the discouraging predictions of his friends failed to come to pass." (American Annals of the Deaf, Hartford, 1 vol. x, page 181.) Similar experiments, after the birth of a child ascertain whether it could hear or not, have been made by many anxious deaf parent since.

of which the dates are not reported belong to the earlier decades. The high rate of progression beginning with the third decade and continuing with some variations down to the present time is doubtless largely due to the establishment of schools for the deaf in America, the first of which was opened at Hartford in 1817, and which now number 89 in the United States and 6 in Canada. The educated deaf are brought into closer relations with the world of hearing people and with one another than the uneducated, and are better able to marry and support a family.

The number of partners in marriage tallying with the number of marriages, if each person had been married but once, would be 8,942 ; but 362 of the deaf partners were married twice, 2 of the hearing partners were married twice to deaf persons, 32 of the deaf were married thrice, 2 were married four times, and one was married five times. Making the necessary deductions for these second, third, fourth, and fifth marriages, the number of partners in marriage comprised in the records is 8,504. They are classified, with respect to deafness or hearing, as follows:

TABLE II.

Partners in marriage.	Number.	Percentage.
Deaf persons	7,277	85.571
Hearing persons	892	10.489
Persons unreported whether deaf or hearing	335	3.940
Total	8,504	100.000

Of the 4,471 marriages comprised in these records, there are 974 with respect to which I have no information concerning the offspring resulting therefrom. These are mostly marriages of which the records have been made from announcements published in the early volumes of the American Annals of the Deaf, or in other periodicals relating to the deaf, with the addition of such de as could be derived from institution records, but witl spect to which it was impossible to obtain any infoı tion as to the later history of the persons concerned, s they had either died or changed their residences, and c not be found at the time when inquiry was made. T 974 marriages are excluded from the tabulation that lows.

The number of marriages of which the results witl spect to offspring have been reported, one or both of partners in marriage being deaf, is 3,497. Of these ı riages 419 were very recent, having taken place less ı a year before they were recorded, and, consequently, spring was not to be expected from them. These marriages are excluded from the tabulation that foll leaving 3,078 marriages of a year's standing or lon concerning the results of which inquiry is to be made

The total number of children reported as born of tl 3,078 marriages is 6,782. The actual number of child as will be explained later (page 19), is probably somev larger than this. As many of the married couples are living, the future results may be different from those l reported.

Before entering upon the questions proposed at outset of this Inquiry, let us briefly consider one not tl specified, which, though of less interest, is not witl importance from a sociological and physiological poin view, viz: Are marriages of the deaf less productiv offspring than ordinary marriages? According to the tistics of marriages of former pupils of the Hart School, published by Dr. Williams, Principal of School, a few years ago, they are much less product Of the 590 marriages he reported, 283, or 47.9 per ce were without offspring. Dr. Williams says on this po "It will be noticed that nearly one-half of the marri are without issue, so far as we have been able to le

It is probable that in some cases there have been children of whom we have received no account. In other cases the marriages are of recent date. But, making due allowance for all these, the proportion of sterile marriages is still very large, much exceeding that in the general population. It is a serious question whether nature alone is responsible for this barrenness."*

The proportion of sterile marriages contained in the present collection is not nearly as large as in the statistics reported by Dr. Williams. Of the 3,078 marriages of a year's standing or longer, of which the results have been reported, 434, or 14.1 per cent., were without offspring. This is not a large proportion; probably it is not much larger than that of ordinary marriages. We have no statistics of sterility in marriage for the whole country with which to compare this result, but the proportion of married women living in Massachusetts in 1885 who were without children was 17.56 per cent.†

The number of marriages reported in these records which are known to have resulted in children is 2,644. The number of children reported is 6,782. Probably the actual number of children, as will be explained later (page 19), is larger; but the number reported gives an average of 2.565 children to each marriage. We have no statistics showing the average number of children to a marriage for the whole country; but in Massachusetts in 1885 the average number of children to each mother who had had children was 4.11.‡ The mothers of the 6,782 children reported in these marriage records of the deaf number 2,598, giving an average of 2.61 children to each mother. When we consider that the children are probably not fully reported, and that a considerable p portion of the marriages, as shown by Table I, are comparatively recent date, it seems probable that m riages of the deaf are somewhat, but not very much, productive than ordinary marriages. That they are so what less productive may perhaps be due, as suggested Dr. Mygind, not directly to the deafness of one or botl the partners in marriage, but to the circumstance that age of the deaf at the time of marriage, owing to later age at which they leave school, is higher than of the general population.*

We will now consider the first question proposed in Inquiry, viz: Are marriages of deaf persons more liabl result in deaf offspring than ordinary marriages?

There are two ways in which the results of the marria of the deaf, with respect to deaf offspring, may prop be considered. First, we may regard the marriages, ascertain what number and percentage of them resu in deaf offspring. Secondly, we may regard the chilc born from these marriages, and ascertain what num and percentage of them were deaf. I shall pursue e of these methods in turn.

First, regarding the marriages, the following table sh all the marriages of a year's standing or longer, of wl the results have been reported, one or both of the parti being deaf, and the number and proportion of them resulted in deaf offspring (with or without other offspri

We do not know just what proportion of marriages in which both of the partners are hearing persons result in deaf offspring; but the proportion is certainly very much less than 9.746 per cent. Probably it is much less than one per cent.

Even if we should include in the tabulation the 974 marriages of which the results were not reported and the 419 marriages which took place less than a year before they were recorded, and should assume that none of them resulted in deaf offspring, making the number of marriages upon which the calculation was based 4,471, the marriages resulting in deaf offspring would be 6.7 per cent. of all the marriages, which is certainly a very much larger proportion than that of marriages in which both of the partners are hearing persons.

Now let us regard the children born from these marriages and ascertain what number and percentage of them were deaf. This is shown in the following table:

TABLE IV.

Children born from marriages of the deaf.	Number.	Percentage.
Deaf children	588	8.670
Hearing children	5,091	75.066
Children unreported whether deaf or hearing	1,103	16.264
Total	6,782	100.000

The actual number and percentage of "hearing children" are probably greater than shown in the above table. In some cases the sources from which the information was derived merely reported "several children, all hearing," "several hearing children," or other words to the same effect. In order to be on the safe side, I have allowed only two hearing children to each marriage in which "several" were reported, though the actual numbers may have been and probably were greater. In general, moreover, the hearing children are less fully reported than the deaf childr since in many cases I have been able to obtain inforr tion of the latter through school records, census retu newspaper items, etc., but not of the former. Where total number of children is not explicitly stated in the r ords, I have assumed that the total number was the s of those whose names were recorded, though there n have been, and in some cases there probably were, ot children whose names were not recorded.

Of the 1,103 "children unreported whether deaf hearing," 813 are children the fact of whose existence ascertained from announcements of births in early volu of the American Annals of the Deaf, or in other periodi relating to the deaf, from school records and other sour concerning whom it was impossible, at the time of t Inquiry, to obtain further information. It is proba that these were mostly hearing children, for if they l been deaf, when they arrived at a suitable age they wo probably have been sent to some school for the deaf, would have been reported as the children of deaf pare in the "School Statistics of the Deaf,"* from which the information bearing upon the marriages of the d has been carefully gleaned for the purposes of this Inqu The remaining 290 "children unreported whether dea hearing" are children who were stillborn, or who died infancy before it was ascertained whether they were deaf or hearing.

* The "School Statistics of the Deaf," are comprised in a nearly c plete card catalogue of all the deaf who attended schools for the dea the United States up to the year 1890, the only exceptions being in case of a few Southern schools whose records were destroyed during Civil War. This catalogue was made in connection with the work of Eleventh Census of the United States, and is now deposited in the V Bureau. The number of pupils recorded is 27,924, and concerning pupil are given all the important details of his or her antecede school life, and after life that are contained in the records of the scl attended. A fuller description of this work and a summary of a pa the contents are given in the "Proceedings of the World's Congres Instructors of the Deaf," Washington, 1893, pp. 269–283.

We do not know what proportion of the children are deaf among children born from marriages in which both of the partners are hearing persons, but it is certainly very much less than 8.67 per cent. It is probably less than one-tenth of one per cent.

The first question of our Inquiry, then, must be answered in the affirmative. Marriages of deaf persons, one or both of the partners in marriage being deaf (taken as a whole, without regard to the character of the deafness), are far more liable to result in deaf offspring than marriages in which both of the partners are hearing persons.*

On the other hand, these records show that marriages of deaf persons, one or both of the partners being deaf (taken as a whole, without regard to the character of the deafness), are far more likely to result in hearing offspring than in deaf offspring. At least 75 per cent. of the children reported could hear, and since, (1) as above explained (page 19), the hearing children are probably less fully reported than the deaf children, and (2) a large majority of the 16 per cent. "unreported whether deaf or hearing" could probably hear, the proportion of hearing children is doubtless considerably higher than 75 per cent.

The above conclusions, it may be remarked in passing, seem to be in accordance with the generally accepted laws of heredity. It is one of these laws that a physical anomaly,

* Of course I am aware of the fact that many marriages in which both of the partners are hearing persons result in deaf offspring. Sometimes such a marriage results in several deaf children. Indeed, it would be easy to collect statistics showing a much larger proportion of deaf children resulting from marriages in which both of the partners were hearing persons than from these marriages of the deaf. But such marriages would be selected cases, and would therefore not afford a suitable basis of comparison. The marriages of the deaf here recorded are all of which trustworthy information could be obtained, and their results must be compared, not with those of selected cases, but with the average results of marriages of hearing persons.

or an unusual liability to certain diseases, existing in the parent tends to be transmitted to the offspring. Deafness, it is true, is neither a physical anomaly nor a disease, and such expressions as "transmitted deafness," "inherited deafness," etc., are inaccurate and misleading. When the deafness of the parent reappears in the offspring, what is really transmitted and inherited is not deafness, but some anomaly of the auditory organs or of the nervous system, or the tendency to some disease, of which deafness is but the result or the symptom.* It would be strange, indeed, if the anomaly of the auditory organs or of the nervous system, or the disease, that caused the deafness of the parent were never transmitted to the offspring.

On the other hand, the fact that a large majority of the children born from deaf parents can hear seems to accord with the law of heredity that the offspring tend to revert to the normal type.

* This distinction is not a mere purism, but, as will appear later, has an important bearing upon some of the questions proposed in the present Inquiry.

CHAPTER II.

MARRIAGES IN WHICH BOTH OF THE PARTNERS ARE DEAF, AND MARRIAGES IN WHICH ONE OF THE PARTNERS IS A HEARING PERSON.

In this chapter the results of marriages in which both of the partners were deaf* are to be compared with the results of marriages in which one of the partners was deaf and the other was a hearing person.

Most of the statistics that have hitherto been published have indicated a tendency on the part of deaf people to marry one another rather than hearing persons. This tendency appears markedly in the marriages reported in the present collection of records, as is shown by the following table, which gives the number and percentage of the marriages in which both of the partners were deaf, and the number and percentage of those in which one of the partners was deaf and the other a hearing person :

* The term generally employed in discussions of this subject to denote marriages in which both of the partners are deaf is "intermarriage." This is objectionable, first, because the word, as most frequently used in general literature, has a meaning directly contrary to the one intended in these discussions. In general literature "intermarriage" usually means marriage between persons of different classes, as "intermarriage of nobles and plebeians," "intermarriage of blacks and whites," "intermarriage of deaf persons and hearing persons." It is also objectionable because it gives to the prefix inter a meaning contrary to that which it has in other compound words much used in treating of heredity, viz., "interbreeding," which signifies breeding by crossing different stocks, and "intercrossing," which signifies the process or result of cross fertilization between different kinds or varieties. There seems to be no unambiguous word in the English language to denote marriage between persons of the same class.

TABLE V.

Marriages of the Deaf.	Number.	Percentag
Both partners deaf	3,242	72.5
One partner deaf; the other hearing	894	19.9
One partner deaf; the other unreported whether deaf or hearing	335	7.4
Total	4,471	100.0

Probably the actual percentage of the marriages : which one of the partners is a hearing person is somewh larger than appears from the above table; for marriag of this class are probably less fully reported in the: records than those in which both of the partners we: deaf. But, making due allowance for this circumstanc there is no doubt that marriages in which both of tl partners are deaf are far more numerous than those : which one of the partners is deaf and the other is a hea ing person.

Before proceeding to the examination of results, let ı inquire briefly into the reason why so large a proportic of the deaf marry one another. Dr. Bell says that "tl immediate cause is undoubtedly the preference that adu deaf-mutes exhibit for the companionship of deaf-mut rather than that of hearing persons." This preference l ascribes to the following supposed causes: (1) the segr gation of the deaf for the purposes of education; (2) tl reunions of former pupils at the schools where they we: educated, the meetings of the adult deaf for religio worship and social intercourse, and societies and conve tions of the deaf in general; (3) newspapers published f the reading of the deaf; (4) the use of the sign-languag (5) the attempt to reduce the sign-language to writin (6) incorrect ideas concerning the deaf prevalent in tl community, and (7) the employment of deaf teacher The chief causes, to which "nearly all the other caus are ultimately referable," he regards as "(1) segregation for the purposes of education, and (2) the use, as a means of communication, of a language which is different from that of the people." As "preventive measures" he recommends a hearing environment during the period of education, oral instruction, and the suppression of the sign-language.*

Until the year 1869 all the schools for the deaf in the United States and Canada were boarding or "segregate" schools, and the majority of them, including nearly all the larger schools, still belong to this class. In most of them at present more or less oral instruction is given, but the sign-language has been, and is still, used to a considerable extent as a means of communication, and many deaf teachers are employed. Reunions of former pupils are held from time to time in these schools; there are associations of the adult deaf for religious worship, literary improvement, and social intercourse in nearly all the large cities; State and National conventions of the deaf are not infrequent. More than forty newspapers intended especially for the reading of the deaf are published, chiefly at the schools for the deaf. The great majority of the married deaf in America, therefore, have been educated under the environment to which Dr. Bell ascribes their preference for companionship with one another.

On the other hand, within the past twenty-seven years, there have been established in the United States a considerable number of day schools, whose pupils reside at their own homes and are brought together only during school-hours. Most of these day schools are exclusively oral† schools, in which signs are used as little as possible. In the "segregate" exclusively oral schools also, the first of which in America were established nearly thirty ye ago, signs are used as little as possible, reunions of forn pupils are not held, associations and conventions of t deaf are discouraged, newspapers or other periodicals tended especially for the reading of the deaf are not pu lished, and the pupils are urged after leaving school shun the society of the deaf and to associate only with he ing people. In these day and oral schools, therefore, t influences which Dr. Bell deprecates as the cause of t marriages of the deaf with one another are either who absent or are reduced to a minimum. Though th graduates are still few as compared with those of the ol schools, they are numerous enough, and a sufficient nu ber of them have married, to enable us to test the c rectness of Dr. Bell's explanation of the marriages of t deaf with one another.

The following table shows the number of deaf marri persons, and the number and percentage of them marri to deaf partners, classified according to the kind of sch they attended, viz: persons who attended boarding "segregate" schools, persons who attended day schoo persons who attended both boarding and day schoo and persons who attended no school for the deaf. Of t last named some had private instruction at home, so attended common schools for hearing persons before th became deaf, and others were without education:

The following table shows the number of deaf married persons, and the number and percentage of them married to deaf partners, classified according to the methods of instruction pursued in the schools they attended, viz: persons who attended schools not exclusively oral, persons who attended exclusively oral schools, persons who attended schools of both kinds, and persons who attended no school for the deaf:

School attended, or methods of school attended, not known	545	418	76.697
Total	7,277	6,185	84.994

It appears from Tables VI and VII that the percentage of deaf persons marrying deaf partners was larger among those who attended boarding or "segregate" schools and schools not exclusively oral than among those who attended day and oral schools and those who attended no school for the deaf. It follows that the influences named by Dr. Bell do tend to promote and increase marriages of the deaf with one another, and that by the "preventive measures" he recommends the number of such marriages can be somewhat diminished.

But are the influences named the sole, or even the principal, cause of the preference of the deaf for marriage with one another? If so, how are we to account for the fact, shown by Tables VI and VII, that a very large majority of the former pupils of day and oral schools, and even a large majority of the deaf who attended no school for the deaf, married deaf partners?

It may be said that the societies and associations originally composed of former pupils of the older schools, the influences of which the graduates of day and o: schools, and deaf persons who have attended no sch(for the deaf, are more or less subject, are responsible i the marriages of the latter with deaf partners. Doul less they are to some extent; but this cause alone dc not seem adequate to explain the large percentage of su marriages. If it be insisted that it is, the question st remains, Why are the graduates of day and oral schoo and deaf persons who have attended no school for t deaf, with whom the "preventive measures" recommend have been faithfully and earnestly applied, so read: attracted to these societies, and why are the societies al to exert so powerful an influence upon them?

The truth is that there is another cause, less tangible pe haps than those above mentioned, but more profound, whi explains not only the marriages with one another of t deaf who have been taught in "segregate" schools a: with the assistance of the sign-language, but of all t: deaf, under whatever circumstances and by whatev method of instruction they have been educated. Tl profounder cause is the deep feeling of fellowship, affinit kinship, sympathy, which has its roots in the similarity condition of all the deaf, and which affects those who ha been educated in day and oral schools, and even those wl have attended no school for the deaf, in only a little le degree than those who have been segregated for the pu poses of education and have attended schools where t: sign-language is used to a considerable extent as a mea of communication. In no human relation is the truth the proverbs, "Birds of a feather flock together," and ' fellow-feeling makes one wondrous kind," more fully e emplified than in the friendships and marriages of tl deaf. The law of natural selection which attracts de people to one another may be hindered somewhat in i operation by placing them in an environment of heari persons, giving them oral instruction, and repressing the use of the sign-language, but it cannot be abolished, and only in exceptional cases can it be nullified. Naturam expellas furca, tamen usque recurret. When opportunity occurs the strong attraction of mutual sympathy draws the deaf together; community of feeling breaks down the barriers that parents and teachers have taken so much pains to erect, sympathy grows into love, and love results in marriage.

But it is less important for us to determine the reason why a majority of the deaf marry one another than to ascertain the results of such marriages.

Following the same order of inquiry as in the last chapter, let us first see whether marriages in which both of the partners are deaf are less productive of offspring than marriages in which one of the partners is deaf and the other is a hearing person.

The following table includes all the marriages of the deaf of which the results have been reported, except 419 marriages that took place less than a year before they were recorded, from which, consequently, offspring was not to be expected. It shows the number of marriages in which both of the partners were deaf, the number in which one of them was deaf and the other a hearing person, and the number and percentage of each class that were without offspring:

TABLE VIII.

Marriages of the deaf.	Number of marriages.	Marriages without offspring.
		Number.	Percent'e.

One partner deaf; the other unreported whether deaf or hearing.....	102	7	6.862
Total	3,078	434	14.100

It appears from Table VIII that a larger percentage marriages in which both of the partners were deaf w without offspring than of marriages in which one of t partners was deaf and the other a hearing person.

The following table shows the number of marriages each class that resulted in offspring, the number of cl dren born from the marriages of each class, and the av age number of children to a marriage in each class:

TABLE IX.

Marriages of the deaf resulting in offspring.	Number of marriages.	Children.
		Number.	Avera, numb to eac marria
Both partners deaf	2,018	5,072	2.51
One partner deaf; the other hearing	531	1,532	2.88
One partner deaf; the other unreported whether deaf or hearing	95	178	1.87
Total	2,644	6,782	2.56

It appears from Table IX that the average number children to each marriage was slightly less in marriag where both of the partners were deaf than in marriag where one of the partners was deaf and the other a hea ing person. As the children of marriages of the latt class are probably less fully reported in the marria records than those of the former, the actual difference the percentages was probably a little greater than appea from the table.

We saw in the last chapter (p. 16–18) that marriages the deaf, taken as a whole, are probably somewhat le productive than ordinary marriages. We must now co clude that marriages in which both of the partners a deaf are somewhat less productive than marriages which one of the partners is deaf and the other is a hea ing person.

We come now to the most important question to be considered in this chapter, the second question proposed at the outset of our Inquiry: Are marriages in which both of the partners are deaf more liable to result in deaf offspring than marriages in which one of the partners is deaf and the other is a hearing person?

In seeking an answer to this question I shall pursue the same method as in Chapter I, regarding first the 3,078 marriages of a year's standing or longer, of which the results have been reported, and ascertaining what number and percentage of each class of marriage resulted in deaf offspring; and, secondly, regarding the 6,782 children born from these marriages, and ascertaining what number and proportion of the children born from each class of marriage were deaf.

First, regarding the marriages, and classifying them with respect to the deafness of one or of both of the partners in marriage, the following table shows the number of marriages of each class of which the results have been reported, and the number and percentage of them resulting in deaf offspring (with or without other offspring):

TABLE X.

		Number.	Percentage.

One partner deaf; the other hearing	599	75	12.522
One partner deaf; the other unreported whether deaf or hearing	102	5	4.902
Total	3,078	300	9.746

Regarding next the children born from these marriages, the following table shows the number born from marriages in which both of the partners were deaf, the number born from marriages in which one of the partners was deaf the other a hearing person, and the number and perc age of deaf children born from the marriages of each cl

TABLE XI.

One partner deaf; the other hearing	1,532	151	9.
One partner deaf; the other unreported whether deaf or hearing	178	8	4.
Total	6,782	588	8.

It appears from Table X that a smaller percentag marriages in which both of the partners were deaf sulted in deaf offspring than of marriages in which on the partners was deaf and the other a hearing person; it appears from Table XI that a smaller percentage of children was born from marriages in which both of partners were deaf than from marriages in which on the partners was deaf and the other a hearing person.

The second question proposed at the outset of this quiry, therefore, must be answered in the negative. ing the deaf as a whole, without regard to the characte the deafness, marriages in which both of the partners deaf are not more liable to result in deaf offspring t marriages in which one of the partners is deaf and other is a hearing person.

The statistics of Tables X and XI are remarkable. A from the question of the possible intensification of tendency to deafness in the offspring resulting from union of "like with like," which will be considered future chapter, it might be expected that with both p ners deaf the liability to deafness in the offspring w be twice as great as with only one partner deaf, for in marriage there would be two persons to transmit the physical conditions liable to result in deafness, instead of only one person; but not only does it appear from these tables that a smaller percentage of marriages resulted in deaf offspring and a smaller percentage of deaf children was born where both of the partners were deaf than where one of the partners was deaf and the other a hearing person, but it also appears that the proportion of deaf children born to the number of deaf persons married was far less where both of the partners were deaf than where one of the partners was deaf and the other a hearing person. This is still more apparent from the following table, which shows the number of deaf persons married for a year or longer to deaf and hearing partners respectively, of whose marriages the results are reported, the number of deaf children born from these marriages, and the number born to every 100 deaf married persons in each class:

TABLE XII.

it was in the case of the 585 deaf persons who did n hearing partners, as shown in the above table, the nu ber of deaf children liable to be born into the world, far less dangerous for the deaf to marry one another it is for them to marry hearing persons.

Similar results—but less striking, because derived fr smaller number of cases—have appeared in some,
all, of the previously published statistics of marriag

the tendency to deafness in their respective families. For example, two hearing members representing families in which the tendency to hereditary deafness is strong will, if they marry, have a larger percentage of deaf progeny than two deaf persons representing families in which the tendency is less strongly marked. It is the family history extending through many generations, not the personal history of the parents, which must guide us when we estimate the chances of the occurrence of deafness in the offspring."*

We shall be better prepared to estimate the value of these explanations, and of any others that may be offered, after we have examined the classification of the deaf with respect to the nature and circumstances of the deafness. Their consideration is therefore deferred to a future chapter. "In the present state of our knowledge," as Darwin says in commenting upon Mr. Sedgwick's suggestion above quoted, "In the present state of our knowledge it is safer to look at the whole case as simply unintelligible."†

CHAPTER III.

MARRIAGES OF THE CONGENITALLY DEAF AND OF ADVENTITIOUSLY DEAF.

THE third question proposed at the outset of thi quiry was: Are certain classes of the deaf, howevei may marry, more liable than others to have deaf chil and, if so, how are these classes respectively comp and what are the conditions that increase or diminisl liability? In the present chapter the classes consi will be the congenitally deaf and the adventitiously

In the earliest discussions concerning marriages o deaf the opinion was expressed that persons born were more liable to have deaf offspring than those became deaf at some period after birth from advent: causes, and most of the statistics hitherto published tended to confirm this opinion. In the present Inc therefore, pains have been taken to ascertain as fu possible whether the deaf partners in marriage were genitally or adventitiously deaf.

In estimating the value of all statistics on this su it should be remembered that in many cases the fa congenital or adventitious deafness cannot be detern with certainty. Indeed, the fact of congenital dea cannot be determined with absolute certainty in any At the moment of birth it is impossible to find out wh the power of hearing exists or not, though a few days probably, this can be ascertained by applying proper t Generally, the fact of deafness is not discovered unt child arrives at the age when children usually beg talk; at that time it is impossible to say whether the deafness has existed from birth or has occurred at some subsequent period. If the child has suffered from some unmistakable disease that is known to be a frequent cause of deafness, the case is likely to be recorded as adventitious; it may possibly, however, have been congenital. If, on the other hand, no such disease has been observed, the case is likely to be recorded as congenital; but it is, perhaps, quite as likely that the hearing has been lost in consequence of some unnoticed inflammation of the mucous membrane of the tympanic cavity or of the air-passages occurring soon after birth, or at some subsequent time before the deafness was discovered.* Deafness truly congenital is probably of much rarer occurrence than is indicated by even the most trustworthy statistics, and the only adventitious cases of which we can be sure are those of persons of whom it is known that they have heard at some period of their lives. It is to be understood, therefore, that "congenitally deaf," as a rule, really means "supposed to be congenitally deaf," and that "adventitiously deaf," in some cases, means "supposed to be adventitiously deaf."

The 7,277 deaf persons whose marriage records are comprised in the present collection are classified as follows with respect to the congenital or adventitious character of their deafness:

Of 23,931 persons who attended American schools for the deaf up to the year 1890, 9,842, or 41 per cent., were reported as congenitally deaf, and 14,089, or 59 per cent., were reported as adventitiously deaf.* Comparing the percentages of Table XIV with these, it appears that the proportion of the congenitally deaf who married is smaller than that of the congenitally deaf who attended school, and that the proportion of the adventitiously deaf who married is larger than that of the adventitiously deaf who attended school. This difference is perhaps to be explained, in part at least, by the superior average education of the adventitiously deaf, the comparative facility with which they communicate with the hearing world, and

It is interesting to compare the percentages of Tables XVII and XVIII with the conclusions reached a few years ago from an attempt to determine the relative proportions of the same classes of persons by "the theory of probabilities." When Dr. Bell was preparing his "Memoir upon the Formation of a Deaf Variety of the Human Race," he desired to ascertain what proportion of the congenitally deaf married congenitally deaf partners, but could obtain no satisfactory statistics on that point. occurred to him that some light might be thrown up the subject by "the theory of probabilities." He thei fore submitted the question to a distinguished mathema cian, who agreed with him in this idea, and presented t following conclusions as the probable solution of t problem: (1) of the congenitally deaf who married de partners, one-half married congenitally deaf partners a one-half married adventitiously deaf partners; (2) of t adventitiously deaf who married deaf partners, thre sevenths married congenitally deaf partners and fou sevenths married adventitiously deaf partners.* T difference in the results of "the theory of probabilitie and those of the present Inquiry is probably chiefly d to the former having been based upon a smaller numb of cases, in which the disparity in the proportions of t congenitally deaf and the adventitiously deaf was le than in these statistics.

Following the same order of inquiry as in the prece ing chapters, let us first compare the productiveness the marriages of the congenitally deaf and of the adve titiously deaf.

The following table includes all the marriages of a yea standing or longer, of which the results have been reporte classified according to the congenital or adventitious cha acter of the deafness of the partners in marriage. It sho the number of marriages of each class, and the numb and percentage of them that were without offspring:

Professor Newcomb's conclusion was based upon t marriages of 629 deaf persons, of whom 298 were reported as congenita deaf and 331 as adventitiously deaf. He made allowance "for a probal slight tendency of the two classes, congenital and non-congenital, choose each other."

Summing up all the marriages of the congenitally deaf, one or both of the partners being congenitally deaf, and all the marriages of the adventitiously deaf, one or both of the partners being adventitiously deaf, as shown in Table XIX, the following table shows the number of marriages of each class, and the number and percentage of them that were without offspring:

It appears from Tables XIX and XX that a slightly larger percentage of the marriages of the congenitally deaf were without offspring than of the marriages of the adventitiously deaf.

The following table shows the number of marriages of each class that resulted in offspring, the number of children born from the marriages of each class, and the average number of children to a marriage in each class:

Summing up all the marriages of the congenitally d that resulted in offspring, one or both of the partners be: congenitally deaf, and all the marriages of the adv titiously deaf that resulted in offspring, one or both of t partners being adventitiously deaf, as shown in Ta XXI, the following table shows the number of marriages each class, the number of children born from the m riages of each class, and the average number of childı to a marriage in each class:

It appears from Tables XXI and XXII that the avera number of children to each marriage was slightly higl in the marriages of the congenitally deaf than in th of the adventitiously deaf. This result, which is not wl we should have expected from the larger percentage marriages of the congenitally deaf that were without c spring, as shown by Tables XIX and XX, is perhaps d to the circumstance that the average duration of the m. riages of the congenitally deaf here recorded was probal greater than that of the marriages of the adventitiou: deaf, for a majority of the earlier pupils of Americ schools were congenitally deaf, while within recent ye: a majority of them have been adventitiously deaf.*

both the marriages without offspring and those resulting in offspring, the disparities in the results of the marriages of the congenitally and the adventitiously deaf are slight. We conclude that, while there is not much difference with respect to productiveness between marriages of the congenitally deaf and of the adventitiously deaf, the latter are probably slightly more productive.

We come now to the principal question to be considered in this chapter: Are marriages of the congenitally deaf more liable than marriages of the adventitiously deaf to result in deaf offspring?

In seeking an answer to this question, I shall pursue the same method as in the previous chapters, first regarding the 3,078 marriages of a year's standing or longer, of which the results have been reported, and ascertaining what number and percentage of each class resulted in deaf offspring; and, secondly, regarding the 6,782 children born from these marriages, and ascertaining what number and proportion of the children born from each class of marriage were deaf.

First, regarding the marriages, and classifying them with respect to the congenital or adventitious character of the deafness of the partners in marriage, the following table shows the number of marriages of each class, and the number and percentage of them resulting in deaf offspring (with or without other offspring):

It appears from Tables XXV and XXVI that marriages of the congenitally deaf, whether they are married to one another, to adventitiously deaf partners, or to hearing partners, are very liable to result in deaf offspring; that marriages in which both of the partners are congenitally deaf are most liable to this result; that those in which one of the partners is congenitally deaf and the other a hearing person come next in order of liability; and that those in which the other partner is adventitiously deaf are least liable to result in deaf offspring.

It appears from Tables XXVII and XXVIII that m riages of the adventitiously deaf, whether they are m ried to one another, to congenitally deaf partners, or hearing partners, are somewhat liable to result in d offspring; that the liability is greatest in marriages which the other partner is congenitally deaf; and t those in which both of the partners are adventitiou deaf are slightly more liable to result in deaf offspr than those in which one of the partners is adventitiou deaf and the other a hearing person.

The totals of Tables XXV and XXVII show the m riages of the congenitally deaf and the adventitiously de respectively, one or both of the partners being deaf, a the number and percentage of marriages of each cl resulting in deaf offspring (with or without other c spring), as follows:

It appears from Tables XXIX and XXX that a far larger proportion of the marriages of the congenitally deaf resulted in deaf offspring than of the adventitiously deaf, and that a far larger proportion of deaf children were born from the former than from the latter. The disparity in the percentages of the results of the two classes of marriages becomes still greater if we regard only the marriages in which the condition of both partners was reported, and omit the large number of marriages in which one of the partners was congenitally deaf and the other adventitiously deaf, as is shown in the two following tables:

The principal question of this chapter, then, must answered in the affirmative. Marriages of the conge tally deaf are far more liable to result in deaf offspri than marriages of the adventitiously deaf.

This conclusion is in accordance with the generally cepted law of heredity that congenital or innate charact istics are far more likely to be transmitted to the offspr than acquired characteristics. Indeed, some of the m eminent hereditarians believe that acquired characterist are never transmitted. In the case of deafness reappe ing in the offspring, if we fall into the common error regarding deafness as the characteristic transmitted, must conclude at once that an acquired characteristic may transmitted; for, as is shown by Tables XXVII and XXVIII, a certain percentage of the marriages of the adventitiously deaf with one another—small, it is true, in comparison with that of the marriages of the congenitally deaf (Tables XXV and XXVI), but much larger than that of marriages in which both of the partners are hearing persons—result in deaf offspring. But when we remember that what is transmitted is not really deafness, but some physical anomaly or tendency to disease of which deafness is but the consequence or the symptom, and that this anomaly or tendency may have been congenital in the parent though deafness did not occur until some later period in life, we see that, even where marriages of adventitiously deaf persons result in deaf offspring, it is possible that the characteristic transmitted may really be a congenital and not an acquired one. This is an interesting topic, but to inquire into it further at present would draw us too far away from the main subject under consideration.

Although the percentage of marriages resulting in deaf offspring and of deaf children born therefrom, as shown by Tables XXIII and XXIV, is much higher where both of the partners were congenitally deaf than where one of them was congenitally deaf and the other a hearing person, it does not appear that this higher percentage is chiefly due, as has been assumed by some writers, to an intensification of the liability to deaf offspring caused by the union of "like with like." It seems rather to be due to the fact that, where both of the partners were congenitally deaf, there were two persons instead of one liable to transmit the physical condition that results in deafness. This is still more apparent from the following table, which shows the number of congenitally deaf persons married for a year or longer to congenitally deaf and to hearing partners respectively, of whose marriages the results are reported, the number of deaf children born from these marriages, and the number born to every 100 congenitally deaf married persons in each class of marriage:

TABLE XXXIII.

Congenitally deaf persons married to congenitally deaf partners or to hearing partners.	Number of congenitally deaf married persons.	DEAF CHILDREN.
		Number.	Numbe born t every 1 congenit deaf mar person
Congenitally deaf persons married to congenitally deaf partners	655	202	30.83
Congenitally deaf persons married to hearing partners	184	63	34.23
Total *	831	265	31.88

If the 655 congenitally deaf persons who married co genitally deaf partners had married hearing partners i stead, and if the proportion of deaf children born fro such marriages had been as large as it was in the case of t 184 congenitally deaf persons who did marry hearing pa ners, the number of deaf children born would have be 224 instead of 202. There seems, therefore, even in t marriages in which both of the partners were congenital deaf, to have been no intensification of the liability deaf offspring caused by the union of "like with like."

This result is contrary to the opinion that has been e pressed by some distinguished investigators who ha considered the subject. In 1868, Dr. W. W. Turner, e Principal of the American School at Hartford for t Deaf, applying to marriages of the deaf certain deductio drawn from experiments in the breeding of domestic a mals, concluded that the tendency to the inheritance deafness by the offspring was greatly intensified wh congenitally deaf persons married congenitally deaf pa ners. "It is a well-known fact as regards domestic a mals," he said, "that certain unusual variations of form color which sometimes occur among their offspring may, by a careful selection of others similar, and by a continued breeding of like with like, be rendered permanent, so as to constitute a distinct variety, as in the case of horses, sheep, and swine. The same course adopted and pursued in the human race would, undoubtedly, lead to the same result. * * * If a person born deaf marry one who was not, there is a probability that there may be a deaf-mute among their children. * * * The amount of deafness transmitted in such cases is so small that interference can hardly be justified. But if two congenitally deaf-mutes intermarry and have children, the probability that there will be congenital deafness among them becomes so great * * * that every consideration of philanthropy, as well as the interests of congenitally deaf persons themselves, should induce their teachers and friends to urge upon them the impropriety of such intermarriages."*

Dr. Turner's views attracted little attention at the time, but their citation with approval in the ninth edition of the Encyclopædia Britannica† doubtless had considerable influence upon public opinion. Still wider publicity and greater prominence were given them a few years later by their adoption and promulgation by Dr. Alexander Graham Bell.‡ Dr. Bell laid special emphasis upon the more remote results which he believed would follow marriages in which both of the partners were congenitally deaf, formulating the theory thus: "If the laws of heredity that are known to hold in the case of animals also apply to man, the intermarriage of congenital deaf-mutes through a num-

But since it app from this large body of statistics that the propor of deaf children to deaf persons married is not gre where both of the partners were deaf, nor even wl both of them were congenitally deaf, than where on them was a hearing person,‖ it follows that either tl

‖ It will probably surprise persons who have not analyzed Dr. Tur statistics carefully to learn that those statistics, like these, show larger proportion of deaf children to deaf persons who married hea partners, and even to congenitally deaf persons who married hea partners, than to those who married deaf partners. Dr. Turner evide did not perceive this fact, but Dr. Bell perceived it and commented u it. "In the case of the American Asylum," Dr. Bell says, "it app that the pupils who married hearing persons had a larger proportio deaf children than those who married deaf-mutes," and "even in case of the congenitally deaf pupils of the American Asylum it app that those who married hearing persons had a larger proportion of offspring than those who married deaf-mutes" ("Memoir," etc., Rep p. 24). Dr. Bell (Ibid., p. 25) made an analysis of these and other ca must be some exceptions to the general law of heredity that the tendency to the transmission of characteristics is intensified by the union of "like with like," or else that there must be some fallacy in the application of this law to the marriages of the deaf.

That any congenital characteristic is more likely to be transmitted to the offspring when it exists in both parents than when it exists in only one parent is doubtless generally true, but it is not invariably the rule. Darwin gives several examples in which peculiarities belonging to both parents "fail to be inherited, apparently from the force of heredity being too strong,"* and says that, "contrary to the common opinion, it is often sufficient for the inheritance of some peculiar character that one parent alone should possess it."† Mr. W. Sedgwick, in commenting upon some statistics showing that marriages in which both of the parents were deaf seldom resulted in deaf offspring, suggests that it may be owing to "excess having reversed the action of some natural law in development;"‡ and Ribot, the eminent French authority on heredity, quoting Mr. Sedgwick's suggestion without expressing dissent, says: "Many physiologists have thought that when both parents present the same characteristics heredity may acquire such power as to destroy itself." § Darwin also cites Mr. Sedgwick's remark, but wisely adds that "it is as searching and exhaustive as the data at his command permitted, and, in view of the large proportion of deaf offspring resulting from marriages in which one of the partners was a hearing person, suggested the explanation, which will be considered in a future chapter, that in a majority of these marriages the deaf partner was probably congenitally deaf, and the hearing partner probably belonged to a family containing deaf persons.

safer in the present state of our knowledge to look at whole case as simply unintelligible."*

The present statistics, which include a much la number of cases than Mr. Sedgwick had before him, not corroborate the view suggested by him ; for while t show a smaller percentage of deaf offspring to deaf n ried persons, and even to congenitally deaf married pers in marriages in which both of the partners were deaf t in those in which one of them was a hearing person, large number of marriages in which both of the partr were congenitally deaf that resulted in deaf offspring dicate that heredity in such cases does not "acquire s power as to destroy itself." On the other hand, Darw statement that, "contrary to the common opinion, i often sufficient for the inheritance of some peculiar ch acter that one parent alone should possess it," is corro rated by these statistics.

The fallacy in applying to marriages of the deaf the of heredity concerning the results of the union of "l with like" lies, I believe, not in the direction sugges by Mr. Sedgwick, but in the erroneous assumption, m by nearly all the writers who have discussed this subj that, when the deafness of the parent reappears in offspring, deafness is the characteristic transmitted. has already been stated, what is really transmitted is deafness, but some anomaly of the auditory organs o the nervous system, or the tendency to some disease which deafness is but the result or the symptom. Th anomalies and diseases, of which deafness is the result the symptom, are many and various. "Hereditary de ness in some of its aspects is like hereditary cough ; b are the result of a great number of possible physi states."† "Deafness no more implies one defect disease than cough or jaundice does. The cough may be due to bronchitis or phthisis, the jaundice to cancer or gall-stones. * * * Congenital deafness * * * is due not to one, but to many different and unconnected pathological conditions."* Now, if a person who is deaf from one anomaly or disease of the auditory organs, or of the nervous system, marries a partner who is deaf from some different and unconnected pathological condition, the law of heredity under consideration should not lead us to expect any intensification of the liability to transmit the defect, for the characteristics existing in the two partners are not the same. Although both partners are deaf, their marriage is not a union of "like with like" from a physiological point of view, and the law does not apply to their case. On the other hand, where the physical condition that results in deafness is the same in both partners—as, for instance, it probably is in a class of marriages of which these records furnish some examples, which will be considered in a future chapter, viz., consanguineous marriages of deaf persons—we should expect the liability to deaf offspring to be intensified by their union; but marriages of this kind are probably less numerous than those in which the physical conditions of the partners are different.

It appears from the following table that in marriages of the adventitiously deaf, also, the proportion of deaf offspring to the number of deaf married persons is less where both of the partners were adventitiously deaf than where one of them was adventitiously deaf and the other a hearing person. The disparity in the percentage of deaf children born from the two classes of marriages of adventitiously deaf persons, however, is far greater than that from the two classes of marriages of congenitally deaf persons. The table shows the number of adven-titiously deaf persons married for a year or longer to ventitiously deaf and to hearing partners respectively whose marriages the results are reported, the numbe deaf children born from these marriages, and the num born to every 100 adventitiously deaf married persons each class of marriage:

TABLE XXXIV.

		Number.	Num born every 1 ventiti deaf m perso
Adventitiously deaf persons married to adventitiously deaf partners	1,656	40	2.4
Adventitiously deaf persons married to hearing partners	305	16	5.2
Total*	1,946	56	2.8

If the 1,656 adventitiously deaf persons who mar adventitiously deaf partners had married hearing p ners instead, and if the proportion of deaf children b from such marriages had been as large as it was in case of the 305 adventitiously deaf persons who marry hearing partners, the number of deaf children b would have been 86 instead of 40.

If the explanation above suggested of the fallacy und lying the theory of an intensified liability to "heredit deafness," supposed to be caused by the union of "l with like," is correct, we see why the percentage of d offspring to deaf married persons should not be very m greater in marriages in which both of the partners deaf than in those in which one of them is deaf and the other a hearing person; but why should the percentage be, as it is in the case of the adventitiously deaf and of the deaf taken as a whole, very much less? This question will be considered in a future chapter, after we have examined some other and entirely different classifications of the deaf.

CHAPTER IV.

MARRIAGES OF THE DEAF, ONE OR BOTH OF THE PARTN HAVING DEAF RELATIVES.

In the preceding chapters some of the most impor of the questions proposed at the outset of this Inq have been answered, but we are not yet prepared to vise the deaf how to choose their partners in marri with a view to diminishing their liability to deaf offspr If we should stop at the conclusions thus far reached, only advice we could give would be that the congenit deaf, if they married at all, should marry the adve tiously deaf, and that the adventitiously deaf should m one another. But if the congenitally deaf should fo this advice, their adventitiously deaf partners would compelled to disregard it; and no opportunity would left for members of either class to follow the choic their own hearts in case they should wish to marry genitally deaf or hearing persons. Happily, another c sification of the deaf may be made besides that b upon the congenital or adventitious character of the d ness, and one that promises to yield more satisfac results.

In the statistics gathered by the heads of schools the deaf, as pupils were brought for admission from t to time, it was early observed that the occurrence of or more deaf persons in a family was by no means r and that a large number of the pupils had other deaf atives, as uncles, aunts, and cousins. So long ago as 1 Dr. H. P. Peet expressed the opinion that the hea brothers and sisters of a deaf person were about as li to have deaf children as the deaf person himself, "supposing each to marry into families that have, or each to marry into families that have not, shown a predisposition toward deaf-dumbness."* Dr. Turner, in 1868, referred to the existence of deafness in collateral branches of certain families as an argument in support of his theory of "Hereditary Deafness."† Dr. Bell, in 1883, quoting the opinion of Dr. Peet above cited, and referring to the fact that in the majority of cases that had fallen under his own personal observation where a deaf person was married to a hearing partner the latter belonged to a family containing deaf persons, reached this conclusion: "A hereditary tendency towards deafness, as indicated by the possession of deaf relatives, is a most important element in determining the production of deaf offspring. * * * It may even be a more important element than the mere fact of congenital deafness in one or both of the parents."‡ In the present Inquiry, therefore, an effort was made to ascertain, as far as possible, whether the partners in marriage had deaf relatives, and, if so, what was the relationship.

In tabulating the returns of deaf relatives, I started out with the hypothesis that, if the possession of deaf relatives were a factor in the problem, the relationship of deaf brother or sister would be the most important one as an indication of the liability to deaf offspring, and I therefore at first made a general tabulation of the results of the marriages in which one or both of the partners had deaf brother or sister, one or more, with or without other deaf relatives, separately from those of the marriages in which one or both of the partners had other deaf relatives (not including descendants), but not deaf brother or sister. Contrary to my expectation, the results proved that the percentages of marriages resulting in deaf offspring, and of deaf children born therefrom, were nearly the same for these two classes, the difference being only between one and two per cent., and in some combinations favoring the first class and in others the second. The total number of marriages of the second class, moreover, proved to be comparatively small, those in which both of the partners had other deaf relatives, but not deaf brother or sister, being only about one per cent. of the whole number of marriages, and those in which one but not the other of the partners was thus conditioned being only about 11½ per cent. In view of these results, and of the additional circumstance that the separation of the two classes would have added greatly to the length and complication of the tables in which the possession or non-possession of deaf relatives is shown in connection with the existence of congenital or adventitious deafness or of hearing, it was decided to combine the two classes. Deaf descendants are not included in the tabulation.

The 8,504 partners in marriage comprised in these records are classified as follows with respect to the possession of deaf relatives (not including descendants):

TABLE XXXV.

Partners in marriage.	Number.	Percentage.
Had deaf relatives	2,496	29.351
Had no deaf relatives	2,169	25.506
No information concerning deaf relatives reported	3,839	45.143
Total	8,504	100.000

We do not know what proportion of married people in general have deaf relatives, but the percentage is certainly very much less than that shown in the above table and in the tables that follow, both of the married deaf and of their hearing partners in marriage. It seems probable, then, at the outset, that the possession or non-possession of deaf relatives will prove an important factor in the solution of the questions under consideration.

The number and percentage of the deaf married persons who had deaf relatives (not including descendants) are shown in the following table:

TABLE XXXVI.

Deaf married persons.	Number.	Percentage.
Had deaf relatives	2,420	33.255
Had no deaf relatives	2,081	28.597
No information concerning deaf relatives reported	2,776	38.148
	7,277	100.000

Regarding only the deaf married persons concerning whom it is reported whether they had deaf relatives or not, we have:

TABLE XXXVII.

Deaf married persons.	Number.	Percentage.
Had deaf relatives	2,420	53.766
Had no deaf relatives	2,081	46.234
Total	4,501	100.000

The proportion of the married deaf having deaf relatives, as shown by Table XXXVII, is larger than that of 17,883 pupils who attended American schools for the deaf up to the year 1890, of whom 7,516, or 42 per cent., were reported as having deaf relatives.* This difference is probably due chiefly to the fact that the deaf relat of the married deaf were ascertained in many c at a later date than those of the "School Statisti additional deaf relatives having been born in the inte

*See "School Statistics of the Deaf," in "Proceedings of the World's Congress of Instructors of the Deaf," Washington, 1893, p. 276.

The number and percentage of the congenitally married persons who had deaf relatives (not inclu descendants) are shown in the following table:

TABLE XXXVIII.

Congenitally deaf married persons.	Number.	Percent
Had deaf relatives	1,461	65.
Had no deaf relatives	314	13.
No information concerning deaf relatives reported	470	20.
Total	2,245	100.

The number and percentage of the adventitiously married persons who had deaf relatives (not inclu descendants) are shown in the following table:

TABLE XXXIX.

Adventitiously deaf married persons.	Number.	Percent
Had deaf relatives	794	20.
Had no deaf relatives	1,707	43.
No information concerning deaf relatives reported	1,452	36.
Total	3,953	100.

It appears from a comparison of Tables XXXVIII XXXIX that the proportion of those who had deaf r tives is far larger among the congenitally deaf t among the adventitiously deaf, while the proportio those who had no deaf relatives is far larger among adventitiously deaf. This indicates a close connec between the existence of congenital deafness and the p session of deaf relatives.

The number and percentage of the hearing partners in marriage who had deaf relatives (not including descendants) are shown in the following table:

TABLE XL.

Hearing partners in marriage.	Number.	Percentage.
Had deaf relatives	72	8.072
Had no deaf relatives	87	9.753
No information concerning deaf relatives reported	733	82.175
Total	892	100.000

It is a matter of regret that the questions with respect to deaf relatives of hearing partners were left unanswered in so large a proportion of the marriage records. The source from which, in many cases, information was obtained concerning the deaf relatives of the deaf married persons—the school records—did not exist with respect to the hearing partners, and the collectors of the marriage records did not all realize the importance of making special efforts to obtain full details concerning relationships, especially with respect to hearing partners. Efforts to fill the lacunæ by further correspondence were sometimes successful but oftener unsuccessful.

Regarding only the hearing partners in marriage concerning whom it is reported whether they had deaf relatives or not, we have:

TABLE XLI.

Hearing partners in marriage.	Number.	Percentage.
Had deaf relatives	72	45.283
Had no deaf relatives	87	54.717
Total	159	100.000

The circumstance that so large a proportion of hea persons having deaf relatives married deaf partners shown by the above table—certainly a much larger p portion than the percentage of hearing persons ha deaf relatives to hearing persons in general, though do not know just what that percentage is—is prob chiefly due to one or more of the following reasons: they became acquainted with the deaf persons whom t married through their own deaf relatives; (2) being customed to communicate with the deaf, they were to communicate with these persons more easily and fr than were hearing people in general; (3) they w drawn towards them with peculiar interest and sympa on account of having deaf relatives of their own. versa, similar reasons would account for the fact t so many deaf persons married hearing partners ha deaf relatives.

We come now to the principal questions to be c sidered in this chapter, viz: (1) Is the possession or n possession of deaf relatives by one or both of the p ners in marriage a trustworthy indication of liability non-liability to deaf offspring? (2) Is it a more tr worthy indication than the congenital or adventiti character of the deafness of one or both of the partne

In seeking an answer to these questions I shall pur the same method as in the previous chapters, regard first the marriages of a year's standing or longer, of wh the results have been reported, and ascertaining w number and percentage of each class of marriage resul in deaf offspring; and, secondly, regarding the child born from these marriages, and ascertaining what num and proportion of the children born from each class marriage were deaf.

Beginning with the classes of marriage that were c sidered in Chapter III—the marriages of the congenit deaf and of the adventitiously deaf—let us see their respective percentages of marriages resulting in deaf offspring, and of deaf children born therefrom, are affected by the possession or non-possession of deaf relatives.

The following table shows the marriages in which both of the partners were congenitally deaf, classified according to the possession or non-possession of deaf relatives (not including descendants), and the number and percentage of each class resulting in deaf offspring:

Of the marriage concerning which it is reported in Tab XLII and XLIII that neither partner had deaf relati and a deaf child was born, there are two records. O coming from the school where the partners were educat contains no information concerning deaf relatives. T other record, from which the statement that neither pa ner had deaf relatives is derived, comes from a pers belonging to another family and residing in another tov and in general gives such meagre details as to show tl its author had but little acquaintance with the family either partner. Under these circumstances the statem that neither partner had deaf relatives may be regard as of doubtful authenticity. If we eliminate this marria from the tables, there remains not a single instance marriages in which both of the partners were congenita deaf and neither had deaf relatives, that resulted in d offspring.

The conclusions to be drawn from the statistics of th tables and of those that follow, as to the relative imp tance of congenital or adventitious deafness and the p session or non-possession of deaf relatives as an indication of liability or non-liability to deaf offspring, are reserved until all the various classes that have been considered in the preceding chapters shall have been examined to see how their respective percentages of deaf offspring are affected by the possession or non-possession of deaf relatives.

Regarding the three marriages resulting in four de children, of which it is reported in Tables XLIV and XL that neither of the partners had deaf relatives, the stat ment with respect to two of them comes from their scho records. With respect to the third, the school recor gives no information concerning deaf relatives, but it say that one of the partners was admitted to school from a almshouse, and that he bore his mother's name, and was not known who his father was. The statement th he had no deaf relatives, which comes from a person be longing to another family and residing in another tow cannot therefore be accepted as well authenticated. I we eliminate this marriage from the tables, the percentag of marriages of this class resulting in deaf offspring i reduced to 2.02 and the percentage of deaf children bor therefrom to 1.14.

The class of marriages in which neither of the partners had deaf relatives, as shown in Tables XLVIII and XLIX, gives a large percentage of marriages resulting in deaf offspring and of deaf children born therefrom, thus differing from all the marriages of this class reported in the other tables. It will be observed, however, that the total number of marriages of this class reported in Tables XLVIII and XLIX is only seven.

It appears from Tables XLII to LXV, inclusive, that however the marriages of the deaf are classified with respect to the congenital or adventitious character of the deafness of one or of both of the partners, or the hearing of one of the partners, the percentage of marriages resulting in deaf offspring, and the percentage of deaf children born therefrom, are almost invariably highest where both of the partners had deaf relatives, next highest where one of them had deaf relatives, and least where neither had deaf relatives; the only exceptions being in classes where the totals are too small to be regarded as important.

Let us now examine the classes of marriage that were considered in Chapter II,—marriages in which both of the partners were deaf, and those in which one of the partners was deaf and the other a hearing person—and see how their respective percentages of deaf children are affected by the possession or non-possession of deaf relatives.

The following table shows the marriages in which both of the partners were deaf, classified according to the possession or non-possession of deaf relatives (not including descendants), and the number and percentage of each class resulting in deaf offspring:

If we eliminate the two marriages mentioned on pages 72 and 74, in respect to which the statements that neither of the partners had deaf relatives are not well authenticated, the number of marriages of this class resulting in deaf offspring is reduced to 6, giving a percentage of 1.456, and the number of deaf children born therefrom is reduced to 7, giving a percentage of 0.803.

It appears from Tables LXVI to LXXI, inclusive, that, however the marriages of the deaf are classified with respect to the deafness of one or both of the partners, the percentage of marriages resulting in deaf offspring, and of deaf children born therefrom, are almost invariably highest where both of the partners had deaf relatives, next highest where one of them had deaf relatives, and least where neither had deaf relatives; the only exceptions being in classes where the totals are too small to be regarded as important.

Let us, finally, examine all the marriages of a year's standing or longer, of which the results have been reported, one or both of the partners being deaf, and see how the percentage of marriages resulting in deaf offspring is affected by the possession or non-possession of deaf relatives (not including descendants). This is shown in the following table:

If we eliminate the two marriages mentioned on pages 72 and 74, in respect to which the statements that neither of the partners had deaf relatives are not well authenticated, the number of marriages of this class resulting in deaf offspring is reduced to nine, giving a percentage of 1.92, and the number of deaf children born therefrom is reduced to eleven, giving a percentage of 1.056. These nine records come from the schools where the partners in marriage were educated or from the partners themselves, and may be accepted as authentic; but when we consider how many persons, especially in America, where changes of residence are frequent, are unacquainted with the condition of all their relatives, it seems not improbable that marriages of this class resulting in deaf offspring are even fewer than here reported.

The statistics above given (Tables XLII to LXXIII, inclusive) fully corroborate Dr. Bell's conclusion that "a hereditary tendency towards deafness, as indicated by the possession of deaf relatives, is a most important element in determining the production of deaf offspring," and that "it may even be a more important element than the mere fact of congenital deafness in one or both of the parents."* Indeed, we may go further and say that while congenital deafness may be regarded as a prima facie indication of a liability to deaf offspring, it should never be accepted as a conclusive indication of such liability; for where congenital deafness is unattended by the possession of deaf relatives the liability, if it exists at all, is very slight, and should not be regarded as a bar to marriage.

The possession or non-possession of deaf relatives has another advantage over the congenital or adventitious character of the deafness, as an indication of liability or non-liability to deaf offspring, viz., that the former is an element the existence or non-existence of which can be definitely ascertained, while the latter is not. As has already been shown (page 36), it is impossible to determine with certainty in any case of supposed congenital deafness whether the deafness is really congenital or adventitious;* but it can generally be determined with certainty, if sufficiently thorough inquiry is made, whether the individual in question has or has not deaf relatives.

Let us now return to the marriages of the deaf in which one of the partners was a hearing person, and see how the liability to deaf offspring is affected by the possession or non-possession of deaf relatives by the hearing partner. The following table shows all the marriages of a year's standing or longer, of which the results have been reported, in which one of the partners was a hearing person, classified according to the possession or non-possession of deaf relatives (not including descendants) by either partner, and the number and percentage of marriages of each class resulting in deaf offspring:

* This consideration, aside from any other, is of itself sufficient to show the absurdity and folly of the attempts, happily unsuccessful, that have been made in one or two of our States to prohibit the marriage of the congenitally deaf by law. (See "An Act concerning crimes and punishments," which was introduced into the Connecticut legislature in 1895, was reported with approval by the Committee on Humane Institutions, and but for the strenuous efforts of Dr. Job Williams, Principal of the American School, at Hartford, for the Deaf, would have become a law. The text of the proposed act is given in "American Annals of the Deaf," Washington, 1895, vol. xl, p. 310. A similar law was proposed in the Minnesota legislature a few years ago.) If such a law were enacted it would be a dead letter, for it would be impossible to prove in any case that the deafness of the person accused of violating the law was congenital and not adventitious.

The total number of marriages shown in Tables LXXIV and LXXV, in which information concerning deaf relatives is reported, is unfortunately too small to enable us to form conclusions that are entirely satisfactory; but taking them for what they are worth, and comparing them class by class with Tables LXVI and LXVII, which relate to marriages in which both of the partners were deaf, it appears that hearing persons having deaf relatives are as liable to have deaf offspring as deaf persons having deaf relatives, supposing each to marry deaf partners who have, or each to marry deaf partners who have not, deaf relatives. Probably similar results would appear if we could obtain statistics of the marriages of hearing persons having deaf relatives and married to hearing partners who have, or to hearing partners who have not, deaf relatives; but such marriages do not come within the scope of the present Inquiry. These statistics, so far as they go, corroborate the opinion expressed by the late Dr. H. P. Peet, that "the [hearing] brothers and sisters of a deaf-mute are about as liable to have deaf-mute children as the deaf-mute himself, supposing each to marry into families that have, or each into families that have not, shown a predisposition toward deaf-dumbness."*

These statistics also corroborate the conclusion drawn by Dr. Bell (1) from the opinion of Dr. Peet above quoted, (2) from his own "personal observation that in the majority of cases where a deaf-mute was married to a hearing person, the hearing person belonged to a family containing deaf-mutes," and (3) from the results of marriages of former pupils of the Hartford and Illinois Schools: viz., that "in a large proportion of cases in which the marriages were productive of deaf offspring, both parents had deaf-mute relatives (even in the case where one parent was a hearing person)."†

It is a natural deduction from the above conclusion of Dr. Bell's, and one that seems to be sustained by the statistics of Tables LXXIV and LXXV, that the large proportion of deaf children born from marriages in which †A. G. Bell, "Memoir upon the Formation of a Deaf Variety of the Human Race," Reprint, Washington, 1884, pp. 24–26. Another conclusion of Dr. Bell's, drawn from the careful analysis he made of the marriages of former pupils of the Hartford and Illinois Schools, was that "in a large proportion of marriages where deaf offspring resulted both parents were probably congenitally deaf where both were deaf-mutes, and one parent congenitally deaf where only one was a deaf-mute." This conclusion is also corroborated by the present statistics, but, as Dr. Bell conjectured, and these statistics prove, the possession of deaf relatives is a more important indication of liability to deaf offspring than the mere fact of congenital deafness in one or both of the partners in marriage. In fact, it is the only trustworthy indication of such liability.

one of the partners was a hearing person and the other deaf, and both had deaf relatives, is to be explained by the hereditary transmission of certain physical conditions tending to produce deafness from the hearing partner as well as from the deaf partner.* It also seems reasonable to conclude that in marriages where the hearing partner has deaf relatives and the deaf partner has not,† if the children are deaf, the hereditary transmission of the physical condition tending to produce deafness is due to the hearing partner rather than to the deaf partner.

But why is the percentage of marriages resulting in deaf offspring, and of deaf children born therefrom, larger in marriages where one of the partners was a hearing person than in those where both of the partners were deaf?‡ If the proportion of hearing partners with deaf relatives to the whole number of hearing partners were larger than the proportion of deaf partners with deaf relatives to the whole number of deaf partners, that circumstance, in connection with the explanation above suggested, might be accepted as the answer to this question; but a comparison of Tables XL and XLI with Tables

* "An inherited characteristic * * * may or may not have been manifested by the parents or other ancestors. If it is more common either among the ancestors or the brothers and sisters and cousins of the organism than it is in the race at large, this fact is scientific proof that it is an inherited characteristic." † Only 20 such marriages were reported in the present statistics, and only one of these resulted in deaf offspring. It is probable, however, that there were some cases of this kind among the 11 marriages in which the hearing partner had deaf relatives and no information concerning deaf relatives of the deaf partner was reported, two of which resulted in deaf offspring, and among the 181 marriages in which no information concerning deaf relatives of either partner was reported, 26 of which resulted in deaf offspring.

‡ See Chapter II, pages 31–35.

XXXVI and XXXVII, respectively, shows a smaller proportion of hearing partners with deaf relatives to the whole number of hearing partners than of deaf partners with deaf relatives to the whole number of deaf partners. Possibly, though not probably, if the deaf relatives of the hearing partners were as fully reported as are those of the deaf partners, these proportions would be reversed. Possibly, on the other hand, though not probably, if the marriages in which one of the partners was a hearing person were as numerous as those in which both of the partners were deaf, the disparity in the percentages of the results would be reversed. Taking the statistics as we have them, while the possession of deaf relatives by the hearing partner probably accounts for a considerable number of cases of deafness in the offspring, it does not alone seem to afford an adequate explanation of the fact that the percentage of deaf offspring is larger from marriages in which one of the partners was a hearing person than from those in which both of the partners were deaf.

Another explanation, or partial explanation, of this phenomenon will be presented for consideration in the next chapter.

Returning now to the most important question of this whole Inquiry, Wherein lies the special liability of marriages of the deaf to result in deaf offspring? it appears from the facts above shown that the possession or non-possession of deaf relatives affords the key to its solution. If a deaf person, whether congenitally or adventitiously deaf, has deaf relatives, that person, however married, is liable to have deaf offspring, the liability being much greater, however, in the case of the congenitally deaf than in that of the adventitiously deaf; and if a deaf person, either with or without deaf relatives, marries a person, whether deaf or hearing, who has deaf relatives, the marriage is liable to result in deaf offspring. If both partners have deaf relatives, the physical conditions tending to produce deafness, whatever they may be, are liable to be transmitted from both parents, and the probability of deaf offspring is therefore largely increased; but even when only one of the partners has deaf relatives, the liability to deaf offspring is still considerable.

In view of this conclusion, what advice is to be given the deaf on the subject of marriage? It may be said that it is of no use to give them any advice at all; that they do not want advice, and will resent it if offered. I do not think so. I have been intimately associated with the deaf for nearly half a century, and it is my observation and experience that, while they have confidence in their own judgment concerning matters with respect to which they know that they are competent to form an opinion, and while they resent any unwarranted interference with their liberty as individuals, they are always ready to listen to friendly advice from persons whom they believe to be their friends; and, especially with respect to the matter of marriage, I am persuaded by the earnest assurances I have received from many of them in the course of this Inquiry that they are exceedingly anxious to learn the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, and, if possible, to avoid forming marriage ties which will be liable to result in deaf offspring.

It must be admitted, however, that the conclusion to which we have been brought renders the question of the advice to be given on the subject of marriage a delicate and difficult one. For those of the deaf who have no deaf relatives, indeed, the question is easily answered. The advice to be given them, if they wish to marry in such a way as not to be liable to deaf offspring, should not be, as it often has been, to choose hearing partners. It should be to choose partners, whether deaf or hearing, who have no deaf relatives; and the marriages for them to avoid, in order to escape deaf offspring, are not marriages with the deaf, but marriages with persons, whether deaf or hearing, who have deaf relatives. But what advice shall be given the deaf, unhappily constituting a considerable proportion of the whole number, who have deaf relatives?

The answer to this question must depend upon the views one holds as to the rightfulness and propriety of marriage where the union is liable to result in deaf offspring. It may be said, with truth, that deaf persons having deaf relatives have as good right to marry as their hearing brothers and sisters, for a similar liability to deaf offspring probably exists in both cases; it may also be said, with truth, that they have a better right to marry than the consumptive, the inebriate, the criminal, or persons in whose families there exists a tendency to idiocy or insanity, for deafness is a less evil than is liable to be transmitted from individuals belonging to any of these classes; but whether, after all, it is right and advisable for them to marry is another question. Different answers to this question have been given by prominent friends of the deaf. Dr. Gillett, for nearly forty years Superintendent of the Illinois School for the Deaf, now President of the American Association to Promote the Teaching of Speech to the Deaf, says: "My advice to deaf-mutes is to contract marriage just as others do, with whomsoever they find that compatibility that ensures a happy marriage, as a truly felicitous union is not chiefly dependent upon physical conditions. * * * One of their inalienable rights, as of others, is the pursuit of happiness; and I know of no better way of its pursuit than in a congenial conjugal relation."* And in reply to an inquiry as to what his advice would be in an actual specified case, in which, from the numerous instances of deafness in the ancestry and other relationship of one of the persons contemplating marriage, and the congenital deafness of the other, the liability to deaf offspring appeared to be unusually great, he says: "My advice in such a case as this would be for the young people to examine themselves carefully as to what their motives are in contemplating matrimony. If they have no higher thought than the animal impulse, I would advise them by no means to enter into that sacred relation; but if they are already so united in heart that each is needful to the happiness of the other, I would advise them, as soon as their circumstances are such as to enable them to maintain a family in comfort, whether the children should hear or be deaf, to follow the promptings of their higher nature, with a determination to rear their children to respectability and usefulness, which they can do in one case almost as effectually as in the other. * * * If deafness were a crime, or a disgrace, or entailed suffering, I would certainly discourage it; but since it does not, I deem it wise to encourage such a marriage, if the parties most interested believe, after reflection, that their own happiness will be promoted thereby.*

On the other hand the President of Gallaudet College, who is recognized by all the deaf as a friend and well-wisher no less sincere, says: "If such a condition in the families was disclosed as to render the birth of deaf children probable, a reason for hesitation would surely be recognized which every truly benevolent and unselfish mind would regard as serious. I have several personal friends who have remained unmarried because of the existence in their families of certain mental or physical defects likely to descend to offspring; and as I honor them for their unselfishness, so would I rank high in my esteem a deaf person who lived single for a similar reason. But the consideration of this aspect of the question need not be extended; it can be dismissed with the advice to all young deaf people to look carefully into the matter of 'family deafness' before their hearts become entangled with any one, and govern themselves accordingly."* My own opinion coincides with President Gallaudet's.

Whatever answer may be given to this difficult question, it cannot be doubted that all persons, whether deaf or hearing, who have deaf relatives, and all persons whom individuals belonging to this class may wish to marry, ought to be fully informed in due season of the fact that marriages of persons having deaf relatives are liable to result in deaf offspring.

CHAPTER V.

CONSANGUINEOUS MARRIAGES OF THE DEAF.

When pupils are admitted to American schools for the deaf the question is usually asked whether their parents were related by blood, and from the replies to this question statistics have been collated showing a considerable percentage of deaf children born from consanguineous marriages in general;* but, so far as I am aware, no attempt has hitherto been made to ascertain the results of consanguineous marriages of deaf persons. Indeed, the probable results of such marriages have scarcely been considered, except briefly by Dr. Bell in an Appendix to an Address on the subject of Marriage, delivered before the students of Gallaudet College a few years ago. In that connection Dr. Bell made the following statement of the results which in his opinion would be liable to follow consanguineous marriages of deaf persons:

"1. A deaf person, not born deaf, who has no deaf relatives, * * * will probably not increase his liability to have deaf offspring by marrying a blood relative.

"2. A deaf person, born deaf, who has no deaf relatives, * * * will probably increase his liability to have deaf offspring by marrying a blood relative.

"3. A deaf person, whether born deaf or not, who has deaf relatives, * * * will probably increase his liability to have deaf offspring by marrying a blood relative, especially if that relative should happen to be on the deaf side of the family. For example: If his father has deaf relatives, and his mother has none, he will be more likely to have deaf offspring if he marries a relative of his father than if he marries a relative of his mother."*

In the present Inquiry an effort was made to obtain statistics of consanguineous marriages of the deaf, if any such marriages there were, by asking in the record blanks the questions, "Were the parties related before marriage? If so, what relationship?" Where the records were filled out by the partners in marriage themselves, or by persons who went directly to them for information, these questions were generally answered, but where, as in a majority of cases, they were filled out from school records, newspaper items, and other indirect sources, the questions were left unanswered. The following table shows all the marriages of the deaf, one or both of the partners being deaf, comprised in the records, and the number and percentage of them that were reported as consanguineous:

TABLE LXXVI.

Marriages of the deaf.	Number.	Reported as consanguineous.
		Number.	Percent'e.

Probably the actual number and percentage of consanguineous marriages of the deaf are larger than shown in the above table.

The following table shows the various relationships between the partners in marriage that were reported, and the percentage of each to the whole number of consanguineous marriages:

Total	31	100.000

Whatever theory may be held as to the cause of the large percentage of deaf children born from consanguineous marriages in general—a subject that does not come within the scope of the present Inquiry,—we should expect from the facts presented in the last chapter, taken in connection with well-established laws of heredity, that consanguineous marriages in which the partners, one or both of them, were themselves deaf would be especially liable to result in deaf offspring; for the same physical condition tending to produce deafness would be likely to exist in both partners and, from the union of "like with like," to be transmitted to their offspring with increased intensity. We should also expect the liability to deaf offspring to be greatest in the consanguineous marriages of the congenitally deaf and of those having other deaf relatives besides the other partner in marriage.

In comparing the results of the consanguineous marriages of the deaf and of the marriages not consanguineous, I shall pursue the same method as in the previous chapters, first regarding the marriages of a year's standing or longer, of which the results have been reported, and ascertaining what number and percentage of each class of marriage resulted in deaf offspring; and, secondly, regarding the children born from these marriages, and ascertaining what number and proportion of the children born from each class of marriage were deaf.

First, regarding the marriages, and classifying them with respect to the consanguinity of the partners in marriage, the following table shows the number of marriages of each class, of a year's standing or longer, of which the results have been reported, and the number and percentage of them resulting in deaf offspring (with or without other offspring):

TABLE LXXVIII.

Marriages of the deaf.	Number of marriages.	Marriages resulting in deaf offspring.
		Number.	Percent'e.
Partners consanguineous	31	14	45.161
Partners not consanguineous, or no information concerning consanguinity reported	3,047	286	9.386
Total	3,078	300	9.746

Regarding next the children born from these marriages, the following table shows the number born from marriages reported as consanguineous, the number born from marriages not so reported, and the number and percentage of deaf children born from the marriages of each class:

TABLE LXXIX.

Marriages of the deaf.	Number of children.	Deaf children.
		Number.	Percent'e.
Partners consanguineous	100	30	30.000
Partners not consanguineous, or no information concerning consanguinity reported	6,682	558	8.351
Total	6,782	588	8.670

Though the number of consanguineous marriages reported is small, it is, I think, large enough to give importance to the results. It appears from Table LXXVIII that the percentage of marriages reported as consanguineous that resulted in deaf offspring is nearly five times as great as that of marriages not so reported ; and it appears from Table LXXIX that the percentage of deaf children born from marriages reported as consanguineous is nearly four times as great as from marriages not so reported. We conclude that consanguineous marriages, one or both of the partners being deaf, are very liable to result in deaf offspring.

Let us now examine some of the classes into which the consanguineous marriages reported may be divided, though we must remember that where the totals are so small the results obtained cannot be regarded as conclusive.

The following table shows the several classes of relationship between the partners, the number and percentage of marriages of each class resulting in deaf offspring, and the number and percentage of deaf children born therefrom :

TABLE LXXX.

Consanguineous marriages of the deaf.	Number of marriages.	Marriages resulting in deaf offspring.
		Number.	Percent'e.

Partners second cousins	5	3	60.000
Partners third cousins	1	1	100.000
Partners cousins (degree unspecified)	14	3	21.429
Partners nephew and aunt	1	1	100.000
Partners distantly related	3	2	66.666
Total	31	14	45.161

The following table shows the number of deaf children born from the marriages of each class and the number and percentage of them that were deaf :

TABLE LXXXI.

Consanguineous marriages of the deaf.	Number of children.	Deaf children.
		Number.	Percent'e.
Partners first cousins	26	7	26.923
Partners second cousins	25	10	40.000
Partners third cousins	1	1	100.000
Partners cousins (degree unreported)	36	7	19.444
Partners nephew and aunt	4	3	75.000
Partners distantly related	8	2	25.000
Total	100	30	30.000

The number of consanguineous marriages of each class of relationship, as shown in Tables LXXX and LXXXI, is too small to enable us to form conclusions as to their comparative results, but the large percentage of marriages resulting in deaf offspring, and of deaf children born therefrom, in every one of the classes, indicates that it is dangerous for deaf persons to marry their blood relatives, no matter what the character or degree of the relationship.

The following table shows the marriages in which both of the partners were deaf, those in which one of the partners was deaf and the other a hearing person, and the number and percentage of marriages of each class resulting in deaf offspring:

TABLE LXXXII.

Consanguineous marriages of the deaf.	Number of marriages.	Marriages resulting in deaf offspring.
		Number.	Percent'e.

The following table shows the number of children, and the number and percentage of deaf children, born from the marriages of each class:

TABLE LXXXIII.

Consanguineous marriages of the deaf.	Number of children.	DEAF CHILDREN.
		Number.	Percent'e.

One partner deaf; the other hearing.	67	20	29.851
One partner deaf; the other unreported whether deaf or hearing	2	.....	.....
Total	100	30	30.000

It appears from Tables LXXXII and LXXXIII that the liability to deaf offspring is about the same in consanguineous marriages in which one of the partners is deaf and the other a hearing person, as in those in which both of the partners are deaf. The percentage of marriages resulting in deaf offspring is somewhat larger in the former class, and the percentage of deaf children born therefrom is slightly larger in the latter class. However, the totals of the two classes are too small to yield conclusive results.

The following table shows the marriages in which the partners, one or both of them, were congenitally deaf, those in which neither of the partners was congenitally deaf, and the number and percentage of marriages of each class resulting in deaf offspring:

TABLE LXXXIV.

Consanguineous marriages of the deaf.	Number of marriages.	MARRIAGES RESULTING IN DEAF OFFSPRING.
		Number.	Percent'e.
One or both partners congenitally deaf	17	7	41.176

The following table shows the number of children, and the number and percentage of deaf children, born from the marriages of each class:

TABLE LXXXV.

Consanguineous marriages of the deaf.	Number of children.	DEAF CHILDREN.
		Number.	Percent'e.
One or both partners congenitally deaf	64	16	25.000
Neither partner congenitally deaf	36	14	38.889
Total	100	30	30.000

It appears from Tables LXXXIV and LXXXV that consanguineous marriages of the deaf are more liable to result in deaf offspring where neither of the partners is congenitally deaf than where congenital deafness exists in one or both of the partners. This is entirely contrary to what we should expect, judging from the results of the marriages of the congenitally deaf in general as shown in Chapter III. The totals, however, of the two classes of consanguineous marriages under consideration are so small that the result of the comparison of their percentages is not to be accepted as conclusive. The only conclusion we can draw is that it is dangerous for a deaf person, whether congenitally or adventitiously deaf, to marry a blood relative.

The following table shows the marriages in which one or both of the partners had other deaf relatives besides the other partner, those in which neither of the partners had other deaf relatives (not including descendants), and the number and percentage of each class resulting in deaf offspring:

TABLE LXXXVI.

The following table shows the number of children, and the number and percentage of deaf children, born from the marriages of each class :

TABLE LXXXVII.

		Number.	Percent'e.

Neither partner had other deaf relatives besides the other partner.....	22	8	36.364
Total	100	30	30.000

It appears from Table LXXXVI that in consanguineous marriages of the deaf the percentage of marriages resulting in deaf offspring is larger where one or both of the partners in marriage had other deaf relatives besides the other partner than where neither of the partners had other deaf relatives besides the other partner. This was to be expected, judging from the results of the marriages of the deaf in general who have deaf relatives, as shown in Chapter IV, but the difference in the two percentages is not as great as might have been expected. On the other hand, contrary to expectation, Table LXXXVII shows a larger percentage of deaf children born from marriages where neither of the partners had other deaf relatives besides the other partner. While the totals of the two classes, especially of the latter class, are too small to render the results of the comparison conclusive, they indicate unmistakably that it is dangerous for a deaf person to marry a blood relative, whether there are other deaf relatives in the family or not.

The conclusion to be drawn from the results of consanguineous marriages, as shown in Tables LXXVIII to LXXXVII, is that under all circumstances it is exceedingly dangerous for a deaf person to marry a blood relative, no matter whether the relative is deaf or hearing, nor whether the deafness of either or both or neither of the partners is congenital, nor whether either or both or neither have other deaf relatives besides the other partner.

Let us now return, once more, to the perplexing question which has been constantly recurring in the course of this Inquiry, and for which, in Chapter IV, we found but a partial solution: Why is the percentage of marriages resulting in deaf offspring, and of deaf children born therefrom, larger in marriages in which one of the partners was deaf and the other a hearing person than in those in which both of the partners were deaf?

If we turn back to Table LXXXII we shall see that in one respect it presents a remarkable contrast with all the previous tables dealing with marriages in which one of the partners was a hearing person. In all the previous tables the marriages of this class, as compared with those in which both of the partners were deaf, are few in number, but in this table of consanguineous marriages they constitute a majority of the marriages reported. A comparative table will illustrate this difference.

The following table shows the number of marriages reported in the records in which both of the partners were deaf, the number in which one of them was deaf and the other a hearing person, and the number and percentage of consanguineous marriages reported in each class:

TABLE LXXXVIII.

Marriages of the deaf.	Number of marriages.	Consanguineous marriages.
		Number.	Percent'e.
Both partners deaf	3,242	12	0.370
One partner deaf; the other hearing	894	18	2.013
One partner deaf; the other unreported whether deaf or hearing	335	1	0.298
Total	4,471	31	0.693

As has already been said, it is probable that the consanguineous marriages are not fully reported; but there is no reason to suppose that there was any intentional suppression of the facts, or that the consanguineous marriages are more fully reported where one of the partners was a hearing person than where both of them were deaf.

I have no explanation to offer of the remarkable contrast in percentages shown in Table LXXXVIII; but I think we may derive an explanation from it, to supplement and complete the partial explanation already given, of the large proportion of marriages resulting in deaf offspring, and of deaf children born therefrom, in marriages in which one of the partners was a hearing person.

It has been shown in the present chapter that consanguineous marriages of the deaf, one or both of the partners being deaf, are far more liable to result in deaf offspring than ordinary marriages of the deaf. It appears from Table LXXXVIII that the percentage of consanguineous marriages is nearly six times as large among the marriages in which one of the partners was a hearing person as among those in which both of the partners were deaf. Do not these two facts, taken together, explain, to a considerable extent at least, the large proportion of marriages resulting in deaf children, and of deaf children born therefrom, where one of the partners was a hearing person? True, the number of marriages of this class reported as consanguineous, that resulted in deaf offspring, as shown in Table LXXXII, is only 9; but these 9 marriages constitute 12 per cent. of the total 75 marriages in which one of the partners was a hearing person that resulted in deaf offspring,* and the 20 deaf children who, as was shown in Table LXXXIII, were born from consanguineous marriages of this class constitute 13.2 per cent. of the total 151 deaf children born from marriages in which one of the partners was a hearing person.† On the other hand, if we examine the 220 marriages resulting in deaf offspring in which both of the partners were deaf,* we find that only 5, or 2.3 per cent., of them are reported as consanguineous, and that the 10 deaf children born from these consanguineous marriages constitute only 2.3 per cent. of the total 429 deaf children born from marriages of that class.† Moreover, there are 55, or 73.3 per cent., of the 75 marriages in which one of the partners was a hearing person that resulted in deaf offspring, with respect to which the question whether the partners were related before marriage is not answered in the marriage records; if, as seems not improbable, some of these marriages were also consanguineous, still other cases of deaf offspring are accounted for. On the whole, we may conclude that the large proportion of consanguineous marriages among the marriages in which one of the partners was a hearing person is one of the reasons, and perhaps the principal reason, that in marriages of this class the percentage resulting in deaf offspring, and the percentage of deaf children born, are so large.

To the advice to be given the deaf on the subject of marriage must be added, with especial emphasis, the advice under no circumstances whatever to marry persons who are related to them in any degree of consanguinity.

CHAPTER VI.

HAPPINESS.

THE fourth and last question proposed for consideration in the present Inquiry is this: Aside from the question of the liability of the offspring to deafness, are marriages in which both of the partners are deaf more likely to result happily than marriages in which one of the partners is deaf and the other is a hearing person?

When Dr. Bell testified before the "Royal Commission on the Blind, the Deaf and Dumb," etc., in London a few years ago, in reply to a similar question, he said: "The opinions of the principals [of American Schools for the Deaf] seem to be that they are happier when both are deaf-mutes. But I know of no data myself from which we can form conclusions."*

The opinion to which Dr. Bell refers has been forcibly expressed by Dr. Gillett, who has a personal acquaintance with more than two thousand deaf people, many of whom are married: "I believe," he says, "that, as a general rule, their intermarriage is more congenial, and productive of more happiness, than the marriage of deaf with hearing persons, though I have known most beautiful and happy unions of the latter kind. 'Be ye not unequally yoked together' is a Scripture injunction that bears with as much force upon the deaf as upon any others."† This opinion is also held by the majority of the deaf themselves.

* A. G. BELL, in "Appendix to the Report of the Royal Commission on the Blind, the Deaf and Dumb," etc., London, 1889, Answer to Question No. 21,557, Vol. III, p. 825. Reprinted in "Education of Deaf Children," Washington, 1892, Part II, p. 24.

On the other hand, President Gallaudet, whose acquaintance with the deaf is also wide and intimate, in referring to Dr. Gillett's opinion above quoted, says: "Many deaf-mutes think more happiness is to be found in a marriage with a deaf person than with one who hears; but this is by no means as certain as Dr. Gillett, or the deaf themselves, suppose, for it involves a question that has not yet been settled, and never may be. I have known some intermarriages of the deaf to result in wretched unhappiness, but I do not for that reason conclude that such marriages must always, or even often, be unhappy. It is undoubtedly true that some marriages of deaf people with those who hear have turned out badly, but Dr. Gillett's admission that he has known 'most beautiful and happy unions of this kind' is a sufficient answer to all objection to such unions; and to his admission I may be permitted to add the testimony from experience, of both a son and a brother, that marriage between the deaf and the hearing may be entirely happy and essentially successful."* And Dr. Bell, addressing the students of Gallaudet College on the subject of Marriage, says: "Do not let any one place in your minds the idea that such a marriage [with a hearing person] cannot be a happy one. The chances are infinitely in your favor that out of the millions of hearing persons in this country you may be able to find one with whom you may be happy than that you should find one among the smaller numbers of the deaf."†

As President Gallaudet says, the question is one that has not yet been settled. It cannot be settled by such individual testimony and opinion as have hitherto constituted the only attempts in this direction. All of us who are familiar with the deaf can recall many happy marriages, and some unhappy marriages, of each of the two classes, just as we can recall many happy marriages and some unhappy ones among hearing people. Our opinions as to whether the proportion is greater or less in one class than in the other are apt to be influenced by our personal acquaintance, and our personal acquaintance is generally too limited to render our opinions conclusive.

In the original plan of the present Inquiry no provision was made for obtaining information concerning the happiness or unhappiness of marriages of the deaf, for this did not seem to be a subject to which statistics were applicable. But after the returns began to come in, noticing that on the page devoted to "Remarks" divorces and separations were sometimes recorded, it occurred to me that these might afford a basis for a comparison of the unhappiness of the two classes of marriage and, per contra, of their happiness. Statistics of divorce and separation, it is true, do not indicate the entire amount of unhappiness in marriage. "They simply determine the number of cases in which the marital infelicity is so burdensome that the parties are willing to bear publicity of their most intimate relations rather than longer endure the burdens of unhappy conditions."* But they indicate the amount of unhappiness in the one class of marriages of the deaf as fully as in the other, and so enable us to determine the relative proportion of unhappiness in the two classes. I have therefore taken note of all cases of divorce or separation reported in the marriage records, and have added all others of which I have been able to obtain trustworthy information from newspaper publications and personal correspondence. In the following tables the marriages are classified according to whether both of the partners in marriage were deaf, or one of them was deaf and the other a hearing person. In the first table the number and percentage of divorces in each class are shown :

* C. D. Wright, "A Report on Marriage and Divorce in the United States, 1867 to 1886; including an Appendix relating to Marriage and Divorce in certain countries in Europe," Washington, 1891, p. 163.

TABLE LXXXIX.

Marriages of the deaf.	Number of marriages.	DIVORCES.
		Number.	Percent'e.
Both partners deaf.....	3,242	33	1.018
One partner deaf; the other hearing..	894	25	2.796
One partner deaf; the other unreported whether deaf or hearing.....	335	7	2.090
	4,471	65	1.454

The following table shows the number and percentage of separations in each class :

One partner deaf; the other unreported whether deaf or hearing.....	335	7	2.090
	4,471	91	2.035

Combining Tables LXXXIX and XC, we have :

TABLE XCI.

Marriages of the deaf.	Number of marriages.	DIVORCES AND SEPARATIONS.
		Number.	Percent'e.
Both partners deaf.....	3,242	84	2.591
One partner deaf; the other hearing...	894	58	6.488
One partner deaf; the other unreported whether deaf or hearing.....	335	14	4.179
	4,471	156	3.489

It appears from Tables LXXXIX, XC, and XCI that the percentage of divorces and separations is far less in marriages in which both of the partners were deaf than in marriages in which one of the partners was deaf and the other a hearing person. We conclude that in marriages of the former class, as a rule, and other things being equal, the probability of happiness is greater than in those of the latter class. The fourth question of our Inquiry, then, must be answered in the affirmative: Marriages in which both of the partners are deaf are more likely to result happily than those in which one of the partners is deaf and the other a hearing person.

There are three obvious reasons why this should be so. 1. Where both husband and wife are deaf they are united by the strong bond of mutual fellowship and sympathy growing out of their similar condition, which has already been mentioned as the principal reason why the deaf generally prefer to marry one another rather than hearing persons.* 2. They are able to communicate with each other with perfect ease and freedom. 3. The most intimate social relations and sympathies of both, outside the domestic circle, are with the same class of persons. In marriages in which one of the partners is deaf and the other a hearing person, the first of these ties is always lacking, and the second and third are often lacking to a greater or less extent. Even under these less favorable conditions the mutual love of husband and wife may be, and often is, strong enough to render the union a very happy one; but, other things being equal, the greater probability of happiness for marriages in which both of the partners are deaf, indicated by the above statistics of divorce and separation, seems to be indicated also by the nature of the case.

CHAPTER VII.

SUMMARY OF STATISTICS AND CONCLUSIONS.

THE most important of the statistics presented in the preceding chapters, and of the conclusions drawn from them, may be summed up as follows:

AMERICA AND EUROPE.

Marriages of the deaf are more common in America than in Europe. The former pupils of American Schools for the Deaf here recorded as married constitute 23.1 per cent. of the whole number who attended school up to the year 1890, and the actual percentage of the married deaf in America is probably much higher than that. In the countries of Europe from which we have statistics it is only in Denmark that the proportion rises as high as 23 per cent.; in the other countries it varies from 12 to 7 per cent.* This more frequent marriage of deaf persons in America is probably partly due to the absence of certain restrictions that hamper marriage more or less in most European countries, and partly to the more prosperous circumstances, and consequent greater ability to support a family, of the deaf of this country.

THE PRESENT CENTURY.

The marriages of deaf persons in America have increased at a high rate of progression during the present century. The proportion of the marriages recorded for the first decade to the whole number of marriages during the century is 0.02 per cent. For the third decade it is 0.18 per cent., and in each subsequent decade it increases until in the ninth decade it is 22.7 per cent.* Making due allowance for the increase in population, and for the fact that the marriages of the later decades are probably more fully recorded than the earlier ones, the high rate of progression indicated is doubtless largely due to the establishment of schools for the deaf. Not only do the opportunities for acquaintance afforded by school life tend to promote marriage, but the effect of education is to bring the deaf into closer relations with society and to increase their ability to marry and support a family.

* See Introduction, pp. 5-6.

Deaf and Hearing Partners.

A large majority of the married deaf have married deaf rather than hearing partners, the proportion of marriages in which both partners were deaf being 72.5 per cent., and of those in which one of the partners was deaf and the other a hearing person 20 per cent.† This preference of the deaf for one another as partners in marriage has been ascribed to their environment during education, which brings them together in boarding-schools and fosters the use of the sign-language. No doubt this environment has had some influence in promoting their marriage with one another; but that it is not the chief cause is shown by the fact that 77 per cent. of the deaf here recorded who attended day-schools, 78 per cent. of those who attended exclusively oral schools, and 62 per cent. of those who attended no school for the deaf, married deaf partners.‡ The chief cause that leads deaf people to marry one another rather than hearing persons, and one that affects those who have been educated in day and oral schools, and even those who have attended

* See Table I. In the tables of the preceding chapters the percentages are carried out to the third figure of decimals; in this Summary they are generally given with less precision.

† See Table V.

‡ See Tables VI and VII.

no school for the deaf, in only a little less degree than those who have been segregated for the purposes of education and have attended schools not exclusively oral, is the deep feeling of fellowship and sympathy which has its roots in the similarity of condition of all the deaf, under whatever circumstances and by whatever method they have been educated.

Productiveness.

Marriages of deaf persons, one or both of the partners being deaf (taken as a whole, without regard to the character of the deafness), are probably somewhat, but not very much, less productive than ordinary marriages. The proportion of marriages of the deaf without offspring is 14.1 per cent., and the average number of children to each mother who had children is 2.61. In Massachusetts in 1885, the proportion of women without offspring was 17.56 per cent., and the average number of children to each mother who had had children was 4.11.* The actual difference in the average number of children to a mother is doubtless less than these figures would indicate, as the children of the deaf are probably not fully reported and a considerable proportion of their marriages are of recent date.

Marriages in which both of the partners are deaf are somewhat less productive than those in which one of the partners is deaf and the other a hearing person. The proportion of marriages of the former class without offspring is 15 per cent., and the average number of children to each marriage resulting in offspring is 2.5; in the latter class the proportion without offspring is 11 per cent., and the average number of children to each marriage is 2.9.†

Between marriages of the congenitally deaf and those of the adventitiously deaf, there is not much difference in

*See Chapter I, p. 17.

†See Tables VIII and IX.

productiveness, but the former are probably slightly less productive. In marriages of the former class, one or both of the partners being congenitally deaf, the proportion without offspring is 15.5 per cent., and the average number of children to each marriage resulting in offspring is 2.72 ; in marriages of the latter class, one or both of the partners being adventitiously deaf, the proportion without offspring is 14 per cent., and the average number of children to each marriage is 2.47.* The less number of children from marriages of the adventitiously deaf is perhaps due to the fact that the average duration of the marriages of this class recorded was probably less than that of the marriages of the congenitally deaf, as a majority of the earlier pupils of American schools were congenitally deaf, while within recent years a majority of the pupils have been adventitiously deaf.

Deaf Offspring.

(a) One or Both Partners Deaf.

Marriages of deaf persons, one or both of the partners being deaf (taken as a whole, without regard to the character of the deafness), are far more liable to result in deaf offspring than ordinary marriages. The proportion of marriages of deaf persons resulting in deaf offspring is 9.7 per cent., and the proportion of deaf children born therefrom is 8.6 per cent.† Just what proportion of ordinary marriages result in deaf offspring, and what proportion of deaf children are born therefrom, we do not know, but they are probably less than one-tenth of one per cent.

On the other hand, marriages of the deaf are far more likely to result in hearing offspring than in deaf offspring, the proportion of hearing children reported being 75 per cent. and the actual proportion probably considerably higher, while that of deaf children, as above stated, is 8.6 per cent.‡

* See Tables XX and XXII. † See Tables III and IV. ‡ See Table IV.

These results are in accordance, on the one hand, with the law of heredity that a physical anomaly or an unusual liability to certain diseases existing in the parent tends to be transmitted to the offspring, and, on the other hand, with the law of heredity that the offspring tend to revert to the normal type.

(b) Both Partners Deaf, or One Partner Hearing.

For the hereditary transmission of the physical condition that results in deafness, it is not necessary that both of the partners in marriage should be deaf. On the contrary, taking the deaf as a whole, without regard to the character of the deafness, marriages in which both of the partners are deaf are not more liable to result in deaf offspring than those in which one of the partners is deaf and the other is a hearing person. Indeed, they seem to be less liable to result in deaf offspring. The proportion of marriages in which both of the partners were deaf that resulted in deaf offspring is 9.2 per cent., and the proportion of deaf children born therefrom is 8.4 per cent. ; the proportion of marriages in which one of the partners was deaf and the other was a hearing person, that resulted in deaf offspring, is 12.5 per cent., and the proportion of deaf children born therefrom is 9.8 per cent.* If, instead of the number of marriages, we regard the number of deaf married persons, the number of deaf children born to every 100 deaf persons married to deaf partners is 9.4, while the number born to every 100 deaf persons married to hearing partners is 25.8.† Even in marriages where both of the partners were congenitally deaf, the large proportion of them resulting in deaf offspring (24.7 per cent.) and of deaf children born therefrom (25.9 per cent,)‡ can be explained in most cases by the circumstance that there were two persons instead of one liable to transmit the physical condition that results in deafness; for, if we regard the number of congenitally deaf married persons, we find that the number of deaf children born to every 100 congenitally deaf persons married to congenitally deaf partners (30.8) is not greater than the number born to every 100 congenitally deaf persons married to hearing partners (34.2).* In the majority of cases no intensification of the liability to deaf offspring seems to be caused by the union of two deaf persons.

This conclusion is not, as it might appear at first sight, inconsistent with the general law of heredity that the liability to the hereditary transmission of any characteristic existing in the parent is increased by the union of "like with like;" for, when the deafness of the parent reappears in the offspring, the characteristic transmitted is not deafness, as has been generally assumed by writers who have discussed this subject, but it is some anomaly of the auditory organs or of the nervous system, or the tendency to some disease, of which deafness is but the result or the symptom. Inasmuch as these anomalies and diseases resulting in deafness are many and various, it is probable that in most marriages of deaf persons, and even of congenitally deaf persons, the pathological condition that results in deafness is not the same in one partner that it is in the other, and their marriage therefore is not, from a physiological point of view, a union of "like with like."

On the other hand, where the pathological condition of the two partners is the same, as it probably is in the majority of consanguineous marriages of deaf persons, there is doubtless an intensification of the liability to deaf offspring; but happily such marriages are comparatively rare. The number of them here reported, probably less than the actual number, is 31, which is 0.69 per cent. of the whole number of marriages.† The proportion of these 31 marriages that resulted in deaf offspring is 45 per cent.,

*See Table XXXIII. †See Table LXXVI.

and the proportion of deaf children born therefrom is 30 per cent.* The curious circumstance above noted that the percentages of marriages resulting in deaf offspring and of deaf children born therefrom are larger where one of the partners was a hearing person than where both of them were deaf is probably chiefly due to the fact that the proportion of consanguineous marriages reported was much greater where one of the partners was a hearing person (2 per cent.) than where both of them were deaf (0.37 per cent.).†

(c) Partners Congenitally or Adventitiously Deaf.

Congenitally deaf persons, whether they are married to one another, to adventitiously deaf, or to hearing partners, are far more liable to have deaf offspring than are adventitiously deaf persons. The proportion of marriages of the former class, one or both of the partners being congenitally deaf, resulting in deaf offspring, is 13 per cent., and the proportion of deaf children born therefrom is 12 per cent.; in marriages of the latter class, one or both of the partners being adventitiously deaf, the proportion resulting in deaf offspring is 5.6 per cent., and the proportion of deaf children born therefrom is 4.2 per cent.‡ The liability to deaf offspring is greatest when both of the partners are congenitally deaf, the proportion of marriages resulting in deaf offspring in such cases being 24.7 per cent., and the proportion of deaf children born therefrom 25.9 per cent.‖

Marriages of adventitiously deaf persons are more liable to result in deaf offspring than ordinary marriages, but when both of the partners are adventitiously deaf or one of them is a hearing person the liability is slight. The proportion of marriages resulting in deaf offspring where both

* See Tables LXXX and LXXXI.
† See Table LXXXVIII.
‡ See Tables XXIX and XXX.
‖ See Tables XXV and XXVI.

partners were adventitiously deaf is 3.5 per cent., and the proportion of deaf children born therefrom is 2.3 per cent. Where adventitiously deaf persons were married to hearing partners the proportion of marriages resulting in deaf offspring is 3.2 per cent., and the proportion of deaf children born therefrom is 2.2 per cent. Where they were married to congenitally deaf partners the proportion of marriages resulting in deaf offspring is 8 per cent., and the proportion of deaf children born therefrom is 6.5 per cent.*

The greater liability to deaf offspring of marriages of the congenitally deaf than of the adventitiously deaf is in accordance with the generally accepted law of heredity that congenital or innate characteristics are far more likely to be transmitted to the offspring than acquired characteristics. When the deafness of adventitiously deaf parents does reappear in the offspring, we may suppose that the physical anomaly or tendency to disease of which deafness was the result was probably congenital in the parent though actual deafness did not appear until some period later in life.

Deaf persons having deaf relatives, however they are married, and hearing persons having deaf relatives and married to deaf partners, are very liable to have deaf offspring. (Probably hearing persons having deaf relatives and married to hearing partners are subject to the same liability, but such cases do not come within the scope of the present Inquiry.) However the marriages of the deaf are classified with respect to the deafness or hearing of one or both of the partners, or with respect to the congenital or adventitious character of the deafness, the percentage of marriages resulting in deaf offspring and the percentage of deaf children born therefrom are almost invariably highest where both of the partners had deaf relatives, next highest where one of them had deaf relatives and the other had not, and least where neither had deaf relatives; the only exceptions being in a few classes where the totals are too small to be regarded as important.* Taking all the marriages of a year's standing or longer of which the results have been reported, where both of the partners had deaf relatives the proportion of them resulting in deaf offspring is 23.5 per cent., and the proportion of deaf children born therefrom is 20.9 per cent.; where one of the partners had deaf relatives and the other had not, the proportion of marriages resulting in deaf offspring is 6.6 per cent., and the proportion of deaf children born therefrom is 6.4 per cent.; where neither of them had deaf relatives the proportion of marriages resulting in deaf offspring is only 2.3 per cent., and the proportion of deaf children born therefrom 1.2 per cent.† Probably the actual percentages of marriages resulting in deaf offspring and of deaf children born therefrom, where neither of the partners had deaf offspring, are even less than these, for in some cases the statements of the marriage records that neither of the partners had deaf relatives are not well authenticated, and in all of them there is the possibility that there were deaf relatives unknown to the persons who filled out the record blanks. Where neither of the partners has deaf relatives the liability to deaf offspring is very slight, perhaps not greater than in ordinary marriages.

In marriages where both of the partners are congenitally deaf and both have deaf relatives the proportion of them having deaf offspring and the proportion of deaf children born therefrom are very high (28.4 and 30.3 per cent.); ‡ but where neither of the partners has deaf relatives, even though both of them are congenitally deaf, the

* See Tables XLII to LXXI, inclusive.

† See Tables LXXII and LXXIII.

‡ See Tables XLII and XLIII.

liability seems to be slight, perhaps not greater than in ordinary marriages. Fourteen marriages of this class are reported, resulting in 24 children.* Of these children one was deaf, but in this case the statement of the marriage record that neither of the partners had deaf relatives is not well authenticated.† If we accept the statement, the proportion of marriages of this class resulting in deaf offspring is 7.1 per cent., and the proportion of deaf children born therefrom is 4.1 per cent;* but if we reject it, there remains not a single instance of marriages in which both of the partners were congenitally deaf, and neither had deaf relatives, that resulted in deaf offspring. Though the total number of marriages of this class is not large enough to render the result conclusive, yet, taking them in connection with the 111 other marriages of congenitally deaf persons in which neither of the partners had deaf relatives,‡ we are justified in concluding that, while congenital deafness may be a prima facie indication of a liability to deaf offspring, it is not to be accepted as a conclusive evidence of such liability.

The possession of deaf relatives, on the other hand, seems to be a trustworthy indication of a liability to deaf offspring. If a deaf person, whether congenitally or adventitiously deaf, has deaf relatives, that person, however married, is liable to have deaf offspring, the liability being much greater, however, in the case of the congenitally deaf than in that of the adventitiously deaf; and if a deaf person, either with or without deaf relatives, marries a person, whether deaf or hearing, who has deaf relatives,

* See Tables XLII and XLIII. † See Chapter IV, p. 72.

‡ See Tables XLIV to LI, inclusive. The proportion of these 111 marriages that resulted in deaf offspring is 4.5 per cent., and the proportion of deaf children born therefrom is 2.4 per cent.; or, if we eliminate one marriage record, the statement of which that neither partner had deaf relatives is not well authenticated, the proportion of marriages resulting in deaf offspring is 3.6 per cent., and the proportion of deaf children born therefrom is 2 per cent.

the marriage is liable to result in deaf offspring. If both partners have deaf relatives, the physical conditions tending to produce deafness, whatever they may be, are liable to be transmitted from both parents, and the probability of deaf offspring is therefore largely increased; but even when only one of the partners has deaf relatives, the liability to deaf offspring is still considerable.

The marriages of the deaf most liable to result in deaf offspring are those in which the partners are related by consanguinity. Thirty-one such marriages are reported in the marriage records, and of these 14, or 45.1 per cent., resulted in deaf offspring. One hundred children were born from these 31 marriages, and of these 30, or 30 per cent., were deaf.*

The totals of the several classes of relationship, as first cousins, second cousins, etc., and the totals of the several classes of marriage, as of both of the partners deaf, one of the partners deaf and the other hearing, one or both of the partners congenitally or adventitiously deaf, one or both of the partners having other deaf relatives or not, are too small to enable us to form conclusions as to their comparative results; but the large percentage of marriages resulting in deaf offspring, and of deaf children born therefrom, in every one of these classes, indicates that it is exceedingly dangerous for a deaf person to marry a blood relative, no matter what the character or degree of the relationship may be, and no matter whether the relative is deaf or hearing, nor whether the deafness of either or both or neither of the partners is congenital, nor whether either or both or neither of them have other deaf relatives.†

* See Tables LXXVIII and LXXIX.

† See Tables LXXX to LXXXVII, inclusive.

The reason why consanguineous marriages are so much more liable to result in deaf offspring than ordinary marriages of the deaf is, probably, that in such marriages the same condition tending to produce deafness is likely to exist in both of the partners, and, from the union of "like with like," to be transmitted to their offspring with increased intensity.

(f) Summary of Statistics.

The most important of the statistics relating to the several classes of marriages of the deaf, showing the number of marriages of each class of which the results were reported and the number and percentage of each class resulting in deaf offspring, also the number of children born from the marriages of each class, and the number and percentage of them that were deaf, are summed up in the following table.

The fifth and sixth columns of this table, giving the percentage of marriages resulting in deaf offspring and the percentage of deaf children born therefrom, indicate at a glance the comparative liability to deaf offspring of the several classes of marriage. The extremes of liability are found in the two classes last named in the table.

Happiness.

Marriages in which both of the partners are deaf are more likely, other things being equal, to result happily than those in which one of the partners is deaf and the other is a hearing person. The proportion of divorces and separations reported in the marriage records where both of the partners were deaf is 2.5 per cent.; where one of the partners was deaf and the other was a hearing person the proportion reported is 6.4 per cent.*

The more favorable conditions for happiness where both of the partners are deaf, other things being equal, are, doubtless, the strong bond of mutual fellowship growing out of their similar condition, the ease and freedom with which they communicate with each other, and the identity of their social relations and sympathies outside of the domestic circle.

APPENDIX A.

TABULAR STATEMENT OF MARRIAGES.

The following pages present in tabular form the most important of the details contained in the marriage records upon which this Inquiry is based.

In the column headed "Partners in Marriage," the word "Husband" or "Wife" printed in roman type indicates a deaf person; in italics, a hearing person; in heavy-faced type, unreported whether deaf or hearing.

In the columns headed "Number of Children," "Brothers and Sisters," and "Deaf Relatives," the dash (—) indicates that there were no persons of the class named; the dotted line (. . . .) that I have no information concerning the existence of such persons. The abbreviation "sev." stands for "several."

The heading "Unknown" means "Unknown whether deaf or hearing."

In the columns headed "Deaf Relatives" and "Remarks" the numbers refer to the "Reference numbers" of the marriages as they are recorded in this Tabular Statement.

"Age of deafness" means "Age at which deafness occurred." The age is given in years or fractions of a year. The abbreviation "Inf." means "Infancy;" "B" means "Born deaf," and the dotted line here, as elsewhere throughout the Tabular Statement, indicates absence of information.

In the column headed "School for the deaf where educated," the abbreviation of the name of a State indicates a State school for the deaf. Other schools are indicated by the most prominent words in their titles or by the names of the towns where they are situated. The abbreviation "Coll." stands for "Gallaudet College;" "H. M." for "Horace Mann School;" and the letters "C," "N," and "W," prefixed to the initials of a State, for "Central," "Northern," and "Western." The dash indicates that the person did not attend any school for the deaf; the dotted line, absence of information.

APPENDIX C.

ILLEGITIMATE UNIONS.

In the course of the Inquiry concerning the Results of Marriages of the Deaf in America some records of illegitimate unions, one or both of the partners being deaf, came into my hands. It did not seem proper to give these unions a place among honorable marriage records, and they are therefore not included in the foregoing marriage statistics; but as a large proportion of them resulted in deaf offspring, I do not feel at liberty to ignore them altogether.

It appears from such statistics of European countries as have been published that illegitimate unions among the deaf are far more frequent in Europe than America. According to a table compiled by Dr. Mygind, out of 409 unions of deaf persons in Pomerania, Erfurt, Saxony, Denmark, and Mecklenburg, 102, or about 25 per cent., were illegitimate unions.* The number of such unions in America of which I have received information is 12, which is about one-fourth of one per cent. of the whole number of unions reported (4,483). It is not supposed that these 12 constitute all the illegitimate unions of deaf persons that have taken place in America, but I am confident that the percentage of such unions in this country does not even remotely approximate the enormous percentage indicated by Dr. Mygind's table.

* H. Mygind, "Deaf-Mutism," London, 1894, p. 47. In all these illegitimate unions the male partner was a hearing person. Of 316 unions in which one of the partners was deaf and the other a hearing person, 102, or about 32 per cent., were illegitimate unions.

The number of partners in these 12 unions, so far as appears from the records, was 23. Of these, 11 were deaf women, 4 were deaf men, 4 were hearing men, and 4 were men unreported whether deaf or hearing. Three of the 11 women were probably uneducated, having never attended any school for the deaf. Of one of the unions I have no information with respect to offspring resulting therefrom. The number of children reported as born from the 11 remaining unions was 18.

Regarding the 11 unions of which the results are reported, the following table shows the number and percentage of them that resulted in deaf offspring (with or without other offspring):

TABLE A.

Illegitimate unions.	Number of unions.	Unions resulting in deaf offspring.
		Number.	Percent'e.
One or both partners deaf.....	11	7	63.636

Regarding the children born from these unions, we have:

TABLE B.

Children born of illegitimate unions.	Number.	Percent'e.
Deaf children.....	7	38.888
Hearing children.....	11	61.112
Total.....	18	100.000

The totals of these statistics of illegitimate unions are too small to afford a basis for trustworthy conclusions, and we need not pursue the inquiry concerning them further; but the very large percentage of such unions resulting in deaf offspring and of deaf children born therefrom, as compared with the results of marriages, calls for some remark, especially as a similar disparity between the results of illegitimate unions and of marriages appears in the European statistics compiled by Dr. Mygind above mentioned. In the latter the percentages of illegitimate unions resulting in deaf offspring and of deaf children born therefrom are about twice as high as the corresponding percentages from the marriages reported. Dr. Mygind remarks that this is "a circumstance which can scarcely be accidental,"* but he suggests no explanation of it. In the absence of any apparent reason why illegitimate unions should be more liable than marriages to result in deaf offspring, it seems probable that neither in Europe nor America are the whole number of such unions, nor all of their results, reported. Those resulting in deaf children are likely to be reported, because the sending of the children to schools for the deaf to be educated brings to light the fact of their existence, while, in America at least, those without offspring, and those resulting only in hearing offspring, are not likely to be reported. The percentages of illegitimate unions of deaf persons resulting in deaf offspring, and of deaf children born therefrom, therefore, are probably not actually as large as they appear in the above tables. Perhaps they are really no larger than those of marriages.
